Greetings, my fellow fifth graders. Today, I know is an important day for me and you. Today is the day when we turn into middle schoolers. Although I've only been in Azevada for 3 years, I've been giving myself a lot of pressures I have to get through. I always ask the question: how is all this stuff going to help me get a job in the future. The answer is still somehow vague to me. I am fine with not knowing the answer, but, I learn to just believe it and just do it.

I came to America the year 2016, not knowing a single English word except "I don't understand". I have to use my inference skill on what people are saying. I give thanks to all my teachers and all the books I read for helping me on my journey. Because of those things, I am here standing right here reading out this speech that I wrote. One of the most stressful moment in my life is in March 28, 2019, when I got two big projects that I want to get involved in. It's The Tech Challenge 2019 and The Science Engineering Fair. I was falling into my deepest fear that I couldn't get it done. I have like three days to finish both big projects. I was so stressed out that I could not even sleep. I finally get through it using my hope from my incredible and astonishing teammates, especially SPK (pause). In the end, I learn how to balance the tension that's happening in my life. When I finish with two of those projects, it is like the weight of the entire sky lifted off my back. Even though, I might not get anything, I am extremely happy about what I have accomplished. That is one challenging point of the school years I have. Then, there's the happy memory. Although I didn't go to Science Camp, one of my friend describe it as a rollicking and exciting experience. We also have that trip to the water park . In addition, we also have some amazing fun field trips that help us learn more about stuffs.

As the school year conclude to its end, I would like to read this poem one of my classmate, Luis, and me wrote.

Light

I'm surrounded by darkness, loneliness, and coldness,
I'm scared and alone.
I pulled my face up and saw a glamouring light.
It was bright as a shining star.
And harmonious as it came from afar,
I walked up to it.
Suddenly I felt its warmness.
The warmth surrounds me.
The light comforts me.
"Delightful," I said under my breath.

My purpose is to explain that everybody in this world has a light in them, it's just they have to find it. To find it, they must accept failure in their life as a friend, and considered victory a temporary thing. They must work hard and be kind to people. I hope that what I just mention is all of you today in this room. Thank you to all of our teachers that teaches us resourceful information like one plus one equals two. And of course I can't forget to give my gratitude to my parents and my relatives that helps me throughout all of those years.

At right this moment, you guys are all middle schoolers. May your life be blessed with happiness and your work would be wonderful for next year. But for now, let's celebrate!
