

LOU MILLS

Name: Lou Mills
Age: 27
Species: Gargoyle
Gender/Pronouns: She/Her
Height: 5'11"
Sexuality: Pansexual
Birthday: 7/9
Occupation: Teacher

Personality:

- + Compassionate | Creative | Generous
- = Determined | Maternal | Private
- Dependent | Excitable | Gullible

Lou feels most at home with herself when she is encouraging others. She is extremely mindful of those around her and always strives to make sure everyone feels comfortable. Lou can't help but go into "mom mode" with her close friends or with her students. She loves teaching young people with bold and exciting methods because she feels that knowledge is unlocked through the creative pathways of the mind. While she is extremely extroverted and loves to chat with others about themselves, she often chooses to keep information about herself private. She likes to keep a fine line between herself and others, but that doesn't stop her from becoming close with people socially. She just doesn't want relationships to get out of hand because she knows she has a habit of becoming dependent on people and things. No task is too great for her. Whether it takes 10 minutes or 10 years, she is not the type to give up or let anything sway her determination.

Unfortunately, she does not seem to contain her excitement well, and she can get razzed about just about anything, for better or for worse. She can get fired up about new information that may or may not be true, or a new project that may not be the best investment of time. She is also easy to worry. Lou also has a habit of taking a lot of things literally, so some of her students have definitely labeled her as gullible. Through her faults, Lou is always available to help anyone in need. She is the first to offer to share her food, and the first to offer to help you move next weekend! She thrives off of making others feel good about themselves.

CHARACTER HISTORY

Lou doesn't remember much about where she came from, but she remembers waiting. And waiting. And waiting. She had been guarding a temple. She doesn't remember how long she had been there, or why she stayed even after the temple dilapidated down to the ground, but she didn't know what to do otherwise. It was the only thing she knew how to do in the world. So she stayed. And waited. She waited for something, anything, that would give her some sort of purpose or direction.

After who knows how long, someone - a mentor of sorts- would come across her in her directionless state. After spending a couple of years earning Lou's trust, they coaxed her out of the broken down temple and into the world, taking her under their wing. From them she learned to live and love freely. Lou spent hours listening to them talk about the world and how people should focus on what brings them together and lifting one another up rather than spending their life in jealousy or anger. She learned about the earth and the stars and their relationship with people. Her day to day life was very involved in mysticism and holistic practices.

They tended to live frugally, and in doing so Lou learned how to recycle a lot of items and picked up sewing so that they could make their clothes last longer. Eventually she broadened her horizons and started making new pieces all together from salvaged worn out clothes that they had. She took an interest in fashion and began collecting magazines to help inspire her sewing hobby.

They spent nearly three decades together, travelling and sharing their stories and creating new ones with the friendly strangers they would come across. They would often do chores and help others around welcoming properties to help pay for their room for the evening. During this time, Lou realized how much she loved being around children. She wanted to follow in the footsteps of her mentor and teach others valuable skills, along with helping them accept and love one another. When Lou spoke to her mentor about her desire to teach, they fully supported her and encouraged her to receive a proper education.

Once she was able to find a tutor, she became a sponge for all of the knowledge she could possibly retain. She loved learning, and was even more inspired by the fact that she would be able to share everything she was learning with others. She was especially interested in earth sciences. She was diligent with her studies, but unfortunately she was so deep into them that she did not realize that their mentor's health was declining due to their old age. Once she finished her education her mentor revealed to her that they probably would not be around for much longer. Rather than hang around and watch them fade away, her mentor asked her to go to Grimm Falls where they knew she would be able to make a decent life for herself.

So now, she finds herself in an all too familiar position. Waiting, and waiting, and waiting. Waiting for the bus that will take her to a new chapter in her life.

EXTRA:

- Has a lil nub tail that she usually covers
- Always carries around various rocks and crystals
- Loves giving presents, but shy when receiving them
- Makes stuffed animals and toys out of old clothing for her students
- She considers the day she met her mentor her birthday.
- World's best hype man
