Personality

Tea is a prideful and snarky cat who just has to be the smartest person in the room. They have no problem busting into others' conversations to give their 2-cents, and tend to just make everyone grumble in annoyance every time they speak. What's worse is that they're usually right about what they say, just inflating their ego more and more. They have a hard time empathizing with others, though. They're not abrasive, unlike Belladonna, but they've never really faced the same tragedies as some of the other residents have.

Tea tends to get upset over small details or issues, such as a slightly messy nest or a single clump of spiky fur. They do pay great attention to detail though and can easily trace missing cats or items with ease. They do care a lot about the other residents and will defend with every inch of his life, but may prioritize a few cats over others.

History

Youth

Astrantia's parents were well respected and had a great reputation within the Flower Club. They had nests stuffed with exotic flowers found on their travels and would brag about them to everyone and everything. They held great expectations to Tia and her brother, Aster, and scolded them for the littlest mistakes. Although Tia had held up well and done her best, Aster had gotten frustrated with their parents' nit-picky attitude and would rebel against them often, and Tia was too confused to understand her brother's anger. Why couldn't he just obey them? Eventually, their parents started getting more and more harsh, to the point where Astrantia was struggling to keep up with their demands. Aster would begin to meet with Tia in private, discussing how to stop the ridiculous expectations put upon them, but they had conflicting ideas. Aster wanted to run away and become a wanderer, traveling far and wide; but Tia still wanted to stay in the Flower Club, as she wasn't sure she could handle herself out in the wild alone. Fortunately, an opportunity came to make both their wishes come true.

New Home (and identity)

When the announcement came regarding a Ranger Team to find a new home, Tea was... skeptical. After all, the team would have to travel so far, then retrace all those steps, just to retrace them again to get the entire club to their new home. Aster was ecstatic though. He could run away from his parents and all the great expectations that lay upon him, but still be with his littermate. So, Tia reluctantly joined the team, just to make sure her brother stayed in check. Once they finally headed off though, Tia felt a great weight lift off of her shoulders. She didn't realize just how trapped she felt back with her parents, and the ability to do what she wanted when she wanted, was spectacular. It made her realize just how uncomfortable she was with her identity too, and started to change things up a little. Aster supported him endlessly and immediately began giving him new name suggestions. One day, they got into some mischief, and broke into an herb garden. There he saw a tea plant, and felt it was perfect for him! However, the team would start to get divided, as Forget-Me-Not's poor leadership skills would be contested, leading half the team to leave and go back to the club. Soon after, the disastrous cave-in would lead Aster to be paralyzed, and Tea frantic over his safety. The two would brave the journey though, even if Aster would end up leaving the group shortly after they reached their destination.

Flower Colony

Although Tea was heartbroken by his brother's leave, they would tough through the pain and continue on, helping to grow and build the colony in its new home. They have started to grow ambitious, and hope for a spot on the council on day.
