ASTROLOGY:

- Capricorn Sun - Those with Sun in Capricorn have a realistic, grounded approach to life that can be seen no matter how dreamy the rest of the birth chart suggests. These people know how to do things, and to get things done. Some Capricorns naturally turn their backs on things they deem too frivolous. They are very much concerned with things that are worthwhile--and that includes their own lives. Capricorns want to do and be something worthwhile.

- Taurus Moon - It isn't wise to try to push Lunar Taureans into doing anything, but once they have made a commitment, they're persevering. Uncomfortable with surprises, these natives value stability. Their needs are strong but quite simple at the same time--they love the "good things" in life. The world of the five senses is all-important to these natives. Their love of stability and steadiness can make them slaves to routine. However, they are loyal and capable people. They tend to go out of their way to avoid "messy" or unpredictable situations, crises, and emotional displays. Instead, they focus on creating a reliable and secure life around them. In relationships, Lunar Taureans may not easily recognize their partner's need for change, growth, or emotional stimulation.

- Taurus Rising - They're often quite loyal to those they care about. Although they generally don't come on strong, they have personal presence; and they fairly radiate stability. The sign on the Ascendant generally reveals how people start anything new. Taurus, by nature, is resistant to change. It can be difficult to sway Taurus rising natives--they're often rather stubborn and fixed in their ways. Intensity and loyalty are especially important to Taurus rising natives. These are highly sensual people who prefer the comforts that a one-to-one, stable partnership offers. Although Taurus rising individuals value harmony and calm, their partnerships may be on the passionate side. Taurus rising natives are often very comforting to be around. They have a stability about them that is soothing, and an inner harmony that is attractive.

PERSONALITY TYPE:

- Archetype: The Hermit - the hermit is associated with social isolation, though not necessarily to the degree of physical isolation the image described presents, in combination with wisdom, self-knowledge and a connection to the natural world. The hermit is also a natural introvert and introspective who enjoys time spent on their own to think and create.

Neutral good characters sometimes find themselves forced to work beyond the law, yet for the law, and the greater good of the people. They are not vicious or vindictive, but are people driven to right injustice. Neutral good characters always attempt to work within the law whenever possible, however.

CORE CHILDHOOD MEMORIES: Victor remembers playing with his mother when he was a child, as well as studying by his father's side or learning medical knowledge from the two. He also clings onto the memories of them going to the church together, having family dinners, and feeling like he belonged somewhere.

Trigger warning: death, torture, mentions/implied disordered eating.

Before Victor was bitten, he worked with the nurses and doctors when soldiers were brought back from the warzone with injuries. The medical camp was raided by a clan of vampires at the end of the war, as they were attracted by the strong scent of blood. Many were drained of blood, others fled in terror, but Victor stood and protected his father and mother to his best ability. Despite the fact that he was no soldier due to suffering of lupus and hemophilia, he learnt how to use a gun for protection when the war started. Bullets were of no use against the vampires; when Victor shot his first and last vampire, he became a victim of its attack. Instead of being killed, Victor was turned as an example, ending the onslaught. His parents had thought him dead, therefore once the clan left, they buried him. Victor's transformation took 72 hours and, once awake, he dug his way up from the grave with his bare hands. Starved, his clouded memory and senses took him to the medical camp, where he killed one of the doctors and one of the soldiers. It was the priest's prayers and holy water that weakened him enough for the others to tie him up and make a decision: BURN HIM AT THE STAKE. The 24 year old man, freshly turned immortal, did not fight nor opposed the choice that his friends and family took – he was aware that he was a threat, but it hurt all the same. Upon being tied and the ground at his feet being set on fire, Victor could not stand the pain, nor the chanting and prayers. He broke free from the hold of chains and, although burnt, he ran away into the forest until he found a lake where he could soothe the burning sensation of his skin. The healing process was slow and painful, the wounds too deep to be fully cured even by the vampiric genes. It took another 3 days for Victor to set off as far as possible, and another two weeks of starvation for his feral ways to be triggered. He hadn't realized that he was returning to the camp. Maddened by the thirst, he found his parents. Their blood had soothed the craving, but the fear of consequences, despite the agonizing realization of what he'd done, chased Victor away before anyone could find him.

Up to this day, Victor feeds only on animal blood, which greatly affects his healing abilities, speed and general wellbeing. He regularly feeds himself in order to avoid another catastrophe. The scars of fire never healed and they cover 50% of his body. Due to poor diet and general vampiric appearance, Victor looks sickly: dark skin around the eyes and lips, unnatural eye veins, pale skin, dark and uneven skin on his left cheek, neck, back and chest, forearms and legs due to the burning. Although the healing is better than a normal human's, it still looks grotesque.
