How To Prevent Rodents, Birds and Other Pests From Getting In Your Chimney

www.verminpatrol.com

What are some other things that can deter birds?

- Scarecrows
- Loud music or noises
- Strong-smelling substances
- Bird entry point blockers

Spring has sprung. The air is warm, the snow is gone and your chimney is being used less by you. It's being used, however, by others for a different purpose.

The warmer seasons provide a perfect opportunity for pests - birds, squirrels, raccoons, etc. - to take refuge in your chimney. If the chimney flue is not secured, then a pest is likely to crawl down and make your home its home. Here is a list of the most common chimney invaders:

- Chimney Swift - Chimney swifts are gray birds that breed May through July. Their chosen habitat is open structures, like open chimneys. Chimney swifts are a near threatened bird species, and therefore are protected by the Migratory Bird Act of 1918. What this means is that if chimney swifts have taken residence in your chimney, they can only be removed with proper permits, which are often difficult to secure.

The easiest way to divest yourself of these birds is to let them leave on their own. Once they're gone, a chimney sweep can enter and clean out the nests and other items left behind.

- Squirrels - These rodents are amazing climbers and can crawl into anything, especially open chimneys. Once down inside the chimney flue, squirrels make shelter and nests inside your chimney. Squirrels often will need help leaving the chimney, as they can easily climb down, but have a rough go of climbing out.

- Rats - If you're hearing scraping sounds from inside your chimney, then you might have a rat problem. Like squirrels, rats will make your chimney their home, building a nest and raising their rat families in your masonry's secure confines.

- Raccoons - For squirrels and raccoons, a chimney is no different than a big hollow tree. Raccoons love chimneys because they are safe and dry, a perfect living environment. Once they've established a nest, they will likely begin to have a litter.

- Bats - Hearing twittering and rustling from inside the masonry, especially at night? Then you might have a bat problem. Bats love to take shelter in chimneys, especially those that have pulled away from the house. An easy way to tell if these creatures of the night have entered your chimney is to see if there is subtle dark staining around openings. These marks are caused by oils in the bats' fur.

How do you prevent pests from entering your chimney? The best way is a custom-made chimney cap. A stainless steel, galvanized or copper tops will not only prevent rodents and other pests from entering your chimney, but it also will reduce the amount of leaves and other debris that can enter the chimney's top.

You can also prevent these critters from entering your home by keeping the chimney damper closed. If the damper is left open, a raccoon or other rodent could enter your living space, which will provide more difficulties.
