

Chloe Morrison

Chloé Morrison is a veteran communications professional, who spent 14 years as a journalist, reporting on all things Chattanooga.

She's a proud bi-sexual woman who experienced "straight privilege" most of her life.

She's the co-founder of a local business, called Soft Animal, which brings marginalized humans — specifically members of the LGBTQ community — to the center through events and classes.

The self-described free-spirited control freak avoids small talk, but will happily wax poetic about anything from Taylor Swift to mental health or feminism to meditation.

She loves to play guitar, sing, dance and crochet — all for the simple joy of the activities.

The graduate of the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, and former adjunct professor at her alma-mater, wears her heart on her sleeve as she aims learn and share about queer culture.
