- Prince Harry and Meghan Markle have relocated multiple times since “stepping down” from the Royal Family in January
- After several months on Vancouver Island in Canada, the couple left for Los Angeles on March 26
- See odds on where Harry and Meghan will move to next and whether they will relocate from LA before the end of 2022

Back in January, before the world’s biggest concern was the Coronavirus pandemic, the announcement from Prince Harry and Meghan Markle that they were stepping down from the Royal Family made global headlines.

As the public picked its collective jaw up off the floor, Meghan and Harry were already plotting the next steps in their relocation. First situating themselves in Canada’s scenic Vancouver Island for months, they’ve now moved on to the bustle of Los Angeles with 11-month-old son Archie in tow.

Only these two seem to know what their end game is. They seem to be testing out the waters in a few locations before they settle down. Sportsbooks are offering prop bets on where they will move next Odds taken Apr. 6.

Harry and Meghan’s royal departure was decided in a pre-pandemic world. Amidst the current fears of COVID-19, the public is speculating that Harry and Meghan may pack up and head back to London to be with Harry’s family. After all, Harry’s dad, Prince Charles, ended up contracting the virus.

It would make a lot of sense on paper for Harry and Meghan to safely hide out with the Royal Family. That move would come with a lot of safety and security. But that consideration is only looking at half the picture. Certainly, no matter where this couple goes, they are able to have a sense of comfort given the means at their disposal.

Despite all of the uncertainty in all of our lives, this woman remains our one constant. The glue that binds all four constituent parts of our United Kingdom and commonwealth.💕 pic.twitter.com/5KV0Hxp9le

For those uninitiated into the details of the couple’s personal lives, the move to Los Angeles is not a surprise. Meghan is well connected in Los Angeles. Her mother, Doria Ragland, is an LA resident. She’s the Duchess’ closest blood relative and was the only member of Meghan’s family to be present at the Royal Wedding in 2018.

But even though her mom is only ten miles away, Meghan and Harry haven’t had a chance to visit with Doria due to social distancing.

For the safety of everyone involved, the couple will probably stay put for the time being until COVID-19 ends. But after the world resumes a sense of normality, the pair will likely have itchy feet once again and want to try a new destination on for size. So, what is the next best thing geographically? That’d be San Diego.

Pick: San Diego (Even)

The British media used the term “Megxit” (a play on Brexit) when Harry and Meghan initially announced their plans to step down and leave for North America.

Once the couple left Canada for Los Angeles last month, the term resurfaced. So, will the third time be the charm that eventually settles the couple for good, or will they leave LA in short order?

In order for this “yes” bet to succeed, the couple must announce a permanent move from Los Angeles for another location.
Given their track record, it’s quite probable they’ll relocate at least once within the next year and a half.

Harry and Meghan are living their best lives, trying out new things and visiting new locations. Los Angeles is one of the biggest and most exciting cities in the world, sure. But this couple has a lot more ground to cover.
Chances are, once quarantine is said and done and they have their time to explore LA together, they’ll take off for a new destination in no time. Bon Voyage, Duke and Duchess. Enjoy your youth.
Pick: Yes (+200)
