Arabian Belly Dancers Costume

The standard costume for belly dancing is called a "bedla", and consists of a bodice, a belt and a wide skirt with a deep cut to the thigh. For conservative, classical-style dancing, a veil is used to cover the exposed areas of the body.

In some cases, instead of skirts, trousers can be used. The costume is embroidered with pearls, coins, beaded threads, and rhinestones. This plays an important role - decorative elements work to attract attention, give belly dance a special flavor of the East, mesmerize and bewitch. Our dancers often perform the Arabic folk dance Raqs Sharqi with a shawl or scarf, and, as a rule, barefoot or in comfortable shoes.
