You're invited to join BirdNote and Birdability on Thursday, October 24 at 12pm PT/3pm ET for a special virtual event as part of Birdability Week, celebrating how birdsong and birding by ear make birding more accessible for everyone — especially blind birders and birders with vision impairments.

This event will highlight the powerful stories of blind birders in the birding community, showcasing how birdsong helps people connect with nature and the birds around them. Hear from Juan Pablo Culasso, a blind birder and expert sound recordist from Colombia, Donna Posont, head of an innovative program at the University of Michigan-Dearborn that helps blind people of all ages learn about birding and explore nature, along with 17-year-old blind birder Emily Groves, who will share her birding journey.

The event will also offer practical tips, tools, and a mini workshop designed to help you become a better birder by ear. Discover techniques to make identifying birdsong easier, enhance your birding experience, and deepen your connection with the avian world through the beauty of sound and birdsong.
