OVERVIEW / SUMMARY Jaqueline C. Reacher is a driven and ambitious woman in her early thirties. She was born and raised in a middle-class English family, but unlike her family, who were content with their lavish lifestyle, Jaqueline always had a thirst for knowledge and adventure. She was always curious about the world and had a natural knack for problem-solving. Her intelligence and determination set her apart from her peers, and she was often praised for her academic achievements. Jaqueline's ultimate goal is to make a name for herself in the world of research and academia. She wants to break away from the expectations placed on her by her family and prove that she is capable of achieving great things on her own..	Jaqueline's family was a part of the Foundation's aristocratic hierarchy, and they were responsible for managing and overseeing the organisation's operations in France. As a child, Jaqueline was fascinated by the stories and secrets her family would share about the Foundation. She would often sneak into her parents' office and read through their classified documents, much to their dismay. Her parents were initially worried about her curiosity and tried to discourage her from pursuing a career within the Foundation. However, Jaqueline was determined, and she convinced her parents to let her intern at one of the Foundation's research sites during her summer breaks. Jaqueline has a complicated relationship with her family. While they are proud of her achievements, they also disapprove of her decision to work in the Foundation. They see the organisation as a dangerous and unpredictable place, and they worry about Jaqueline's safety.
