The introduction should explain the phenomenon that is the reason behind this research, placing the main topic in the research. Authors should summarize and cite previous research that is relevant to the current research and highlight knowledge gaps that can be filled by this research. The introduction should clearly pose the research question, and outline the author's hypothesis.

2. METHODS

This section contains a brief explanation of the research design, identification of variables, research subjects, data collection techniques, research instruments (name of measuring instrument and its manufacturer, aspects measured, number of items and several examples, as well as information on validity and reliability), research procedure instruments, and the statistical analysis techniques used. The explanation in this section focuses on a clear descriptive explanation of the various activities carried out by researchers in conducting research, so that it can provide opportunities for other researchers to replicate or verify the research procedures carried out. 3. RESULTS

The research results consist of a description of the data obtained in the research. The data in question is not raw data that is still or needs to be processed, but data resulting from analysis or hypothesis testing that clearly answers research questions and shows the latest findings obtained. If presented in the form of tables or pictures, the meaning should be easy for readers to understand quickly. In writing tables and figures using the APA 7th standard.

4. DISCUSSION

The discussion section is a description of the researcher's analysis of the research results obtained, by linking them to the results of previous studies. The description in this section focuses on critical and substantial analysis of research results and comparison with previous findings based on the results of relevant, up-to-date and primary literature reviews. Comparisons should lead to differences with previous research findings so as to show the contribution of research to the development of science. In the final section, the limitations contained in the research are presented. The minimum number of discussion pages is around 30%, which in principle is no shorter than the introduction page.

The research results section is described first, then the discussion section (can use subtitles or without subtitles).

5. CONCLUSION

The conclusion section is a formulation of answers to the research objectives and research questions asked. Conclusions are not a summary of research results. When explaining conclusions, they should be made concisely, clearly and concisely based on the results and discussion. Conclusions must be made in paragraph form, not numerical. The conclusion explains the research findings and new things that contribute to the development of psychology.
