Post difficult ones below and we'll do them together:

- The men come home at the same time and it is implied that this is how it goes each and every single day, and that when they do get home dinner is on the table
- In every account of a utopia, there is work, there is punishment in some form, there is sometimes an army and defenses.
- I was awoken by a loud rustling and grunting.
- If a perfect society was to be built, everyone would have to be in agreement on almost everything.
- This novel was written in 1953, when color television was just starting to come into its own as an artistic medium, and had not yet become a fixture of the average home.
- Is am are was were be been being.
- Jon Krakauer's account of the story was brought into question by other people on his expedition, namely Sandy Pittman and Anatoli Boukreev.
- There are cards like "The Old Man of the Sea" from the Voyages of Sinbad and Aladdin from Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp.
- The book is a collection of 1,001 short stories
- But because society puts the Sunshine Kid down, and tells them it's not okay to be different.
- There are few points to stories that aren't true,

- I could never tell if she was serious or not.
- I wish you were here.
- I went to his house to see what was the matter.
- This was Clara's first time back to college in over 20 years, and she wanted to start off on a good note: lateness was not a good note.
- The music was louder, then it was good.
- I wasn't really focused on the news until I heard his name, Ted Bundy.
- He was met with silence.
- Now Ryan was definitely scared.
- our neighborhood only had 5 houses in it and they were all in a row so we all got our own street to play on
- I wait until it is almost burned out and repeat the processes again and again until there are only charred bones and ashes left.
- She looked at the bloodstain that was directly in front of her.
- I've never been terrible at it, but I've never been fantastic either.
- "You must not have been looking up then," I said warily.
