

Overview of The Mozilla Foundation

The Mozilla Foundation is a non-profit organization that promotes openness, innovation and participation on the Internet. We promote the values of an open Internet to the broader world.

Mozilla is best known for the Firefox browser, but we advance our mission through other software projects, grants and engagement and education efforts such as Mozilla Webmaker.

Webmaker is all about building a new generation of digital creators and webmakers, giving people the tools and skills they need to move from using the web to actively making the web.

Other projects, like Mozilla Open Badges, seek to unlock the full educational potential of the web by making it easy for users to get recognition for skills they learn online and offline.

If you're interested in supporting our efforts, please consider getting involved with Mozilla Webmaker or Open Badges, making a donation or getting involved with the Mozilla community.

Talking Points

- While Mozilla is best known for the Firefox browser, the Foundation promotes its mission through many other other software projects, grants and engagement and education efforts.
- These initiatives involve things like improving web literacy, journalism, accreditation and recognition in education, and protecting the open web and the user's privacy.
- The Mozilla Foundation's mission is to give people the tools and skills they need to move from using the web to actively making the web.
- Some of the projects the Foundation oversees include Mozilla Webmaker, Mozilla Science Lab, Open Badges, Open News, and the Hive Learning Network.
- The Mozilla Foundation is a non-profit-- we get most of our funding from grants and small-dollar donations.

Resources

Website: <https://www.mozilla.org/en-US/>

Twitter: <https://twitter.com/mozilla>

Facebook: <https://www.facebook.com/mozilla>

Contact:

Erica Sackin

Sr. Director of Communications

erica@mozillafoundation.org