

Tough Questions

Make a copy or download the document to write in it To prepare for an interview, take a few moments to anticipate what will be asked, identify the key messages that you want to share, and be ready to return to a central take-away point. Before the interview, take a moment to write down the key points that you want to use in response and draft a lifeline phrase that you use to reset the conversation. As you answer each question, combine key messages with your own knowledge and experience.

Why does your organization support the measure?
Some people are concerned that ranked choice voting is confusing and would actually cause less people to vote in our elections. What's your response to that?
Many voters are extremely dissatisfied with the government and how it has handled problems like homelessness and gun violence. Will this actually help improve conditions in Oregon?
Do you have anything else to add?
