Youth have become the protagonists of various global issues in today's world. From activism to entrepreneurship, youth initiatives are influential drivers of change in businesses, governments, societies, and communities. In the university ecosystem, students make a critical statement for the future we imagine. After every purposeful and innovative action, their voices get louder, and we increasingly move into the spotlight within and beyond our schools. But they cannot do all this work alone. And they are not alone. Moderator: Priya Sharma, PRME Chapter ASEAN Chair (Malaysia) Lakshmi Hiranandani, Programs & Innovation Manager, UNLEASH PLUS (India) Natalie Chung, Co-Founder of V'air Hong Kong (Hong Kong, China) Qingzhu Sun, President of Green Origin Association, Zhejiang University (China) Sandeep Shrestha, Head of ESG and Compliance at Dolma Impact Fund (Nepal)

From activism to advocacy and social entrepreneurship, young people are shaping solutions across all sectors and proposing innovative ways of reducing greenhouse gas emissions and adapting to a warming planet. On the road to COP27, involving non-state actors to tackle challenges related to climate finance, renewable energy systems and urban & rural resilience has never been as urgent. In this event, we will discuss with young leaders the importance of youth entrepreneurship and advocacy considering different regional perspectives. Our goal is to showcase how young people are advancing climate solutions within their field of work toward an inclusive net-zero future.
