That's a lot, ain't it?

Let's start with the big stuff. GameStop and Ryan Cohen. What's been going on?

GameStop is set to have their Q4 earnings report on March 22nd, around the same time that they had their Q4 report last year. Estimates are expecting an EPS of $0.76, which is less than last year's EPS, but still positive.

Although Ryan Cohen's standstill provision has ended, he has remained true to his words to allow the actions of GameStop speak for the company, rather than the words of the executives and directors. Rather, it has been GameStop's partnerships that have been revealing what GameStop is doing, with Robbie Ferguson, the President of ImmutableX, taking the lead on these matters. Robbie suddenly took the scene this year, covering the gaming side of GameStop's developments into the NFT space, as they relate to ImmutableX's involvement with the company. I watched two of these interviews (there were around four that I was aware of), and in each one it became more clear that 1) GameStop is doing something with Loopring that is not related to a gaming NFT marketplace, 2) GameStop's NFT marketplace can host all NFTs that already exist through ImmutableX's currently platforms, allowing for greater exposure to a much larger consumer-base.

Through GameStop's 8K SEC-filing, it was shown that GameStop has a contractual agreement with ImmutableX and Loopring (to some capacity), specifically showing a series of Milestones that will be achieved within GameStop's partnership with ImmutableX. Out of the Milestones, the first two have already been completed, the third of which denoting the launch of GameStop's NFT marketplace with ImmutableX. Just yesterday, Robbie posted onto r/superstonk to announce that he will be sharing additional content and updates through the subreddit in the coming weeks. With the NFT 'due date' for NFT creators having passed on February 21st, it isn't too big of a leap to assume that GameStop is gearing up for launch now that their technical product is ready (Loopring tech, counterfactual wallet, UI, app, ImmutableX tech), and their content for the marketplace is ready (submitted, and presumably minted around this time if not before). I still hold to my guess that the fiat off-ramp will come at the same time as the NFT marketplace launch. With so many individuals using the word 'soon' across social media, GameStop must surely be aiming for this March – June window, rather than the second half of the year. Will they be ready to launch alongside Q4 earnings report? Who knows. Maybe they are more aiming for the shareholders meeting in June.

Along with the due dates for NFT creators on February 21st, GameStop has been transferring millions and millions and millions of IMX tokens out from their official wallet. The Milestone agreement with ImmutableX says that they will have 3.7M inbound IMX tokens, not outbound, so they tokens going outbound are more likely to be related to the incentives they said they would be giving out to creators. Robbie did mention that this NFT marketplace launch is attracting some big names in the space.

And he wasn't kidding. For awhile I was waiting to write this email, just because I wanted to see which new partnerships or companies might be participating in GameStop's NFT marketplace. So here's my list, with CONFIRMS, SPECULATIONS, and POSSIBILITIES to denote which of these are confirmed to be working with GameStop:

- * Microsoft (and thus XBOX, Activision, et al) – CONFIRMED
- * ESL (Esports League – CONFIRMED
- * MTG (Magic the Gathering) – POSSIBLE (partnered, but unknown if they are integrating within the NFT environment)
- * Brave Wallet – CONFIRMED
- * God's Unchained – CONFIRMED
- * Riot Games – SPECULATION
- * Adidas – SPECULATION
- * Kongregate – CONFIRMED
- * Habbo – CONFIRMED
- * EA – POSSIBLE
- * Sea of Thieves – SPECULATION
- * RTFKT / Nike – POSSIBLE

- * Pinata – CONFIRMED
- * Apple – SPECULATION
- * Guild of Guardians – CONFIRMED
- * Gucci, Louis Vitton, Coca Cola, et al – SPECULATION
- * Meta – SPECULATION

That's a good start. I am sure there will be many more major companies that will come at a surprise.

In other news, GameStop had record numbers of product imported over the holiday season this year (possibly trying to get ahead of supply chain issues), and is also rolling out a few eSports hubs within the B&M stores at a few select locations.

On the technical side of things, GME climbed back up to 100% utilization throughout the last several months as GME was slammed by a very large amount of shorts and short derivatives. Along with this, shares on loan have been decreasing steadily, according to reports by Ortex. Many are thinking that the shares on loan decreasing is negatively correlating with the number of GME shares that are direct registered, which pulls away the liquidity from brokerages. As this liquidity is removed, it becomes harder and harder to short the stock, or reshort or naked short the stock.

GameStop suddenly began to include the number of directly registered shares as of their last quarterly earnings report. In that last report, over 5 million shares had been directly registered by retail investors. The cut-off for Q3 earnings was October 31st, which was just when the push to DRS had begun. So the question we will find out soon, at the next earnings report, is how many additional shares have been direct registered between October 31st and January 31st? Various tracking bots or teams on superstonk think the number will be greater than 20 million shares. My guess is that 15 million plus shares will be DRSED. Regardless, 15 million shares would represent over 25% of the float. As the number of DRSED shares increases (or DPSED shares), it will have a greater and greater effect on the stock price, causing brokerages and SHFs to control the stock price and keep it artificially low. It is one of the few things that retail investors can do for a heavily shorted stock, and it has been widely encouraged by many financial experts, including previous members of the DTCC and other financial institutions.

DRSing (Directly Registering Shares) can be done with a phone call to your brokerage. Make sure you get the confirmation number that the transaction has gone through. Brokerages are actively fighting against this process, as it takes away the liquidity they use to manipulate stocks (and to provide information to MMs and SHFs through PFOF (payment for order flow)). You should also look into how the brokerages have changed their agreements this year. You're trusting these entities with your money and investments, but if things turn south, they will turn against you to prevent their own losses. Might as well just cut out the middle-man, which is what DRSing does. I am 100% DRSED personally.

Back to GameStop, there continues to be major questions that are left unanswered, as to what Loopring's involvement with GameStop will be. We already know they are the financial back-end of their NFT marketplace, but then why all the secrecy? There is something more that GameStop is planning, and with every week it seems, there is some new piece of evidence that points to GameStop attempting to get involved in decentralized finance. Using Loopring to launch a decentralized exchange, enabling peer-to-peer transactions in a transparent, secure, fair market.

Many believe that part of this process may involve the merging of GameStop and Loopring, or perhaps Loopring and one of GameStop's subsidiaries. GME Entertainment is a possibility, which has been mentioned in the Milestone contract with ImmutableX, or perhaps GME Entertainment will be the gaming NFT marketplace piece, and GameStop itself will be involved in the merger.

The technical side of Loopring allows for the use of the ERC 1155 tokens, which are tokens that can house many token types. This type of token would be the type that would be used for DeFi, from what I understand, so why is it that Loopring has put so much focus into the production and integration of this type of token? Much of their technology as a company appears to be focused around DeFi rather than specifically for traditional uses of NFTs, and this is further confirmed by the many cryptic posts from Loopring members concerning the future of financial markets. Perhaps it is just hard to believe that GameStop could be going for something big, but rather, that would better explain how they have been able to consistently get some of the biggest players in the field in blockchain, including many top execs that have considered leaving to GameStop to be 'a once-in-a-lifetime' opportunity.

DOJ / SEC / And the rest of the market

Last year, the SEC released a report on the January spike in 2021, which revealed that a short-squeeze did NOT happen in January last year. It didn't take much to realize that this meant that the short-interest on GameStop must be just as high, if not much higher. Any technical trader that has followed GameStop along these months would be able to tell you of the very regular short attacks on the stock price, the slams at the close, the ever-changing shares on loans and utilization percentages, the days-to-cover changing, and short-interest changing as well. Aside from ETFs like XRT which easily displays the massive short-interest on GameStop (they hit 1200%+ short interest for GameStop this year), many long-time followers of the stock could tell you that the true short-interest is hidden through a series of derivatives, including married puts and complicated swaps derivatives, where the SHFs dump their short-exposure on brokerages in a deal known as a swap, or an equity total return swap (ETRS). This is preferable than a pure short or naked short, due to the non-requirement of brokerages to report any kind of short-exposure on their end. But in the end, they are just as complicity as the SHFs, and yet most of the world can see no wrong with these financial giants.

However, the SEC brought forward no indictments or much in the way of fines. However, not too long after, the DOJ announced an official investigation into the matters related to GameStop. Since this time, more and more has been revealed as to who has been involved, but to no one's surprise, the targets of subpoenas and investigations include Melvin Capital, Citadel, Citron Research, Gabe Plotkin, JPMorgan, and other large banks and hedge firms. [Oh the great joy in my heart to hear some of these names]. Not too long after this, a warehouse in Chicago conveniently burnt down, despite having state-of-the-art sprinkler systems that were designed to protect these type of important documents. It was confirmed that this warehouse had many TD Ameritrade documents, but likely they were not the only client using this facility [*cough Citadel]. Over the last few months, the DOJ has further revealed that they are going harder after individuals involved in these companies, and not just the companies themselves, and are pursuing R.I.C.O. charges for these individuals, the number of which is not known. A RICO charge means 20+ years of jailtime. The DOJ has something like a 99.6% rate of conviction for these publicly announced cases, but even so, I won't keep my hopes up until the deal is done and these financial terrorists are put away. Just think of how long Bernie Madoff got away with his various fraudulent activities, and even now he's back out of jail and working at financial firms once again.

The rest of the market has been in decline for a few months now, but even with the Ukraine war, rising inflation, the soon-to-come raising of rates, and other factors, nothing has crashed yet. Most metrics look just as bad as ever, showing incredibly high amounts of negative credit, and low amounts of liquidity. The recent financial reports from Citadel and other SHFs show extremely low amounts of cash on hand, while being overleveraged with shorts nearly 100:1, or greater. (see some of the links in the SHF / ETF section).

I personally have been awful at trying to predict when everything will be ready. It must certainly be a lot of hopium that things will happen sooner or later, but evidently, when you have this many gears that are moving, things tend to stretch out a little while longer than normal.

What can be taken for granted is all the factual actions and statements that have been coming out. Robbie's interviews talking about GameStop's multiple NFT marketplaces. GameStop wrapping up NFT submission for their marketplace. GameStop awarding out [presumably] 28 million+ IMX tokens. GameStop continuing to hire the best in the business. Loopring continuing to add new on-ramps, CEX to LR ramps, and NFT minting. The steady increase of DRSD shares. New partnerships being announced (Pinata, ESL, and others), and new ones that are alluding to the marketplace (Sea of Thieves, Adidas, Nike, and others). Rumors of major players, such as Apple, Meta, and fashion brands getting involved. The companies that would benefit from no longer losing profit to counterfeiting is immense on its own, which includes different shoe and clothing markets, the ticketing industry, and the music industry.

I'm guessing we will see within the coming months, and I am hoping for that first alpha marketplace release before June. The ImmutableX marketplace will come after that, but before the end of this year. Robbie said they were rolling out these milestones aggressively, and considering they are approaching Milestone 3 with light speed, I think he was not embellishing in the least bit.

Obviously, the stock is way down from the price of most of the last year. I believe things are going to change real quick once they launch, but until then, the movement cannot be easily predicted. In the long term, the stock will follow the company revenue, so we can start to expect change once revenue starts rolling in from these NFT marketplaces, or in an even more favorable scenario, some kind of NFT-based dividend to kick off the launch of these marketplaces
