

MISSION STATEMENT

The Journal of Psychology & Law (JP&L) is a student-run publication committed to advancing scholarly dialogue at the intersection of psychology and law. Rooted in the principles of excellence, integrity, and inclusivity, JP&L seeks to provide a platform that showcases innovative research, critical analyses, and diverse perspectives.

Foster Academic Excellence: JP&L is dedicated to publishing high-quality, peer-reviewed articles that contribute to the advancement of knowledge in the fields of psychology and law.

Encourage Interdisciplinary Exploration: Recognizing the richness that emerges at the intersection of psychology and law, JP&L actively encourages interdisciplinary research that bridges gaps, fosters collaboration, and propels the understanding of how psychological principles interface with legal practices and systems.

Amplify Diverse Voices: JP&L is committed to promoting diversity, equity, and inclusion in academia. We strive to amplify the voices of scholars from various backgrounds, experiences, and perspectives, fostering a pluralistic and representative academic environment.

Facilitate Knowledge Exchange: As a student-run journal, JP&L serves as a platform for the exchange of ideas among students, academics, and professionals. By facilitating meaningful discussions and disseminating research findings, we aim to contribute to the growth of a vibrant community dedicated to psychology and law.

Inspire Future Leaders: JP&L aspires to inspire the next generation of scholars, practitioners, and leaders in psychology and law by empowering students to make impactful contributions to the evolving landscape of these disciplines.

Guided by these principles, the Journal of Psychology & Law is steadfast in its mission to be a catalyst for intellectual growth, collaboration, and positive societal change through the publication of thought-provoking and impactful writing.
