

Natural Disasters

Every year different natural disasters affect millions of people around the world. Luckily, in our country we don't have tornados, hurricanes and tsunamis. Forest fires are not as bad as in Australia. But some regions suffer from droughts, floods and earthquakes.

Droughts are long periods without rain when all the plants die and famine begins.

Another awful disaster is a flood. During floods water covers the land that is usually dry and it causes great damage.

I think an earthquake is the most serious disaster as people are killed or injured. Many buildings are destroyed and people become homeless. Rescue teams and volunteers come to help. They pull people out from the rubbles, clear roads, bring medical supplies, food and drinking water. They also help to rebuild the towns and villages. I believe we can all help taking part in charities.
