

The Glowing Death, The Blazing Rock, The Magma Mentor. This is my interpretation of Ryalt and where I believe his Natural Earth Habitat would be, if he were to live on Earth.

An unmistakable feeling of warmth and heat, Ryalt is as fascinating as he is deadly. Immediately upon laying my eyes on this complex and powerful glowstick, I couldn't help but notice his similarities to the Volcano Snail of the Indian Oceans. The bright red coloration, the iron shell, the metal personality. These similarities alone give me reason to believe Ryalt would have NO! problem living in an area reaching 750 degrees Fahrenheit.

And as if that wasn't enough, Ryalt knows magic. MAGMA magic. It's not hard to imagine a badass 4 legged firetrucking shooting out of the volcanic rock below your feet. It's NO WONDER there aren't any that have mastered this magic type better than the magma mentor himself. Some have even reported this glorified Hot Cheeto has a tendency to get stuck in the spur of the moment. No thank you, I'll stick to my insecure flammable landmass over here, Ha-Ha! Incredible.

Rest assured, If I know anything about volcano snails, it's their sheer heart size. As the volcano snail's heart size is the largest from heart to body ratio in the animal kingdom. And I'm fairly certain that underneath the surface of that burning hot skin, our beloved billet is just as loving.