

"I swear he was about to make a comment towards me, the nerve!" Miura huffed with a pout as she walked with him. She was visibly upset at the thought of her adoptive father being a traitor and yet...she couldn't shake off the feeling of something being wrong. "Papa...why would you do this..." Miura mumbled to herself sadly before quickly saying to Shepard, "oh, erm, I'm Miura Arterius. Um, I'm sorry if I'm coming off as weird or anything its just...well, despite helping lead the investigation i'm sure you can imagine the shock that comes with something like this.." She was rambling, she knew that. When she heard Kaiden bring up her relation to Saren she said, "well, interspecies adoptions aren't common, but they do happen." She stayed close to Garrus as she said this before adding with a cheerful smile, "well, I suppose we'd better get going. Oh, and Commander Shepard? Good luck with your specter candidacy, Nihlus talked about it a lot and i want to see it happen, it would be a great thing for humanity"

Kaiden looked surprised as he said, "wait, Arterius? As in Saren's kid? But Saren's a turian right?" Upon hearing her explanation though, he looked embarrassed as he said, "I...I see. I apologize, that was completely rude and uncalled for to ask." On the outside, he only looked a little embarrassed. On the inside though? He was dying of embarrassment. When she left, Kaiden turned to Shepard and said, "Welp, I have a feeling I screwed that introduction up for up. Ugh, me and my damn mouth..." He saw Ashley roll her eyes and sneered, "What, do you have something to say chief?" He didn't like her, not one bit. Sure, his morals are high enough to where he had no issues saving her on Eden Prime, but ever since they got to the citadel it seemed like all she did was complain about one thing or another. However, he trusted Shepard and that alone was a reason, in his eyes, to trust that as whiny and problematic as she may be Ashley may be useful to them to at least some extent..