

William Ford has worked as a newspaper reporter for more than 20 years. He began working at Maryland Matters covering state government and politics on Aug. 29, 2022. During his time with the online non-profit news organization under States Newsroom, he's occasionally appeared on local radio programs talking about some of the news sites coverage of state government and state education. Before working at Maryland Matters, he spent seven years covering Prince George's County, some Maryland politics and other local news in the D.C. area for The Washington Informer, a member of the Black Press. While at the paper, William received awards from the Maryland-Delaware-D.C. Press Association. He was a finalist for beat reporting in 2021 and a 2019 award winner for beat reporting from the D.C. chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists. Last year, William completed a two-week fellowship program in Los Angeles with the Maynard Institute for Journalism Education. Some of his previous work in journalism includes nearly 10 years covering municipalities and other local and regional news for The Morning Call newspaper in Allentown, Pennsylvania.

###