Biography

Growing up in the suburbs, Ava had always enjoyed the feeling of a lively community, neighbours coming over for barbecues, family gatherings once a month. Despite being brought up with many different characters in their life, their family was on the quieter side, enjoying the company of others but not involved in the rowdiness, pleasant bystanders who preferred watching as others entertained. Ava was a little more extroverted than their parents, preferring to mingle even as a young gremlin.

Ava's interest in music started when a relative had brought a guitar to a gathering, from there picking up the music bug and later on applying to Old Boar's Music Academy in Ribs Street. They had a few instruments under their belt, primarily guitar and violin (which their parents pushed). There was something missing though as they ran their bow through the heavy sharpness of the violin. They didn't want to be bound by these strings, opting for a louder, bolder sound after dropping out, much to their parent's dismay.

They'd hang around Ribs Street after purchasing their beloved 'Bloody Fang' and started a band called ViperMoon, named after their affinity for snakes and the night. Their band wasn't big or mainstream, doing mainly small gigs and shows but the feeling on stage was an exhilarating feeling they couldn't get enough of.

Death:

One of their newest band members was like a cancer growing in ViperMoon, influencing bad habits and shady deals, bringing in an equally distasteful manager who had the same vision.

Ava didn't like them with a passion but the temptations they had brought about were too hard to pass, especially when their ego didn't let them look small or weak in front of this person.

A terrible mistake and an intake of too much Pig's Blood had caused their demise.

At least their favourite song had been playing in the background as they drifted.
