What does consent mean to you?

Doodle, write, imagine...

Connect, Extend, Challenge

Consider what you have just seen and heard, and then ask yourself:

How are the ideas and information connected to what you already knew?	What new ideas did you get that broadened your thinking or extended it in different directions?	What challenges or puzzles emerge for you?
---	---	--

Ways to respond if someone says NO or I DON'T KNOW

Your partner might not be ready to consent to an activity for many reasons. You might feel uncomfortable or like you did something wrong. Remember that honouring their boundaries shows respect and care. It might feel weird at the time, but you can make choices about how you respond in a good way.

1. If my partner does not consent to what I want to do, how might I feel in the moment? How do I feel about myself in the moment? How can I not take it personally?

2. If my partner does not consent, what might I think of them?

3. If my partner does not consent, how can I respond in a respectful and kind way? How can I talk it out?

Role Plays Practice

1. Practice being Assertive:

You meet one of your friends in the cafeteria. They are going to skip the afternoon of school to go out and have a few beers. They want you to come along. You recently got caught skipping school and you don't want to get caught again. You decide to tell them you're not going to go.

2. Practice being Assertive:

While you are home alone, you invite a friend over to your house to help you with your homework. After doing homework they grab you and try to kiss you. You try to push them away because you feel things have gone too far. They say, "Come on, you didn't just invite me over here to do homework." You want to get out of the situation and make sure it doesn't happen again.

3. Practice being Assertive:

Your partner thinks that it is time to have sex, but you don't feel like you are ready. Your partner says, "You're just a prude, and if you loved me you'd have sex with me." Although you are scared it may end the relationship, you decide to tell your partner you are not ready to have sex now.

4. Practice Active Listening:

Your friend and their partner decided they were always going to use condoms when they had sex, but last night, they didn't have one. Your friend's partner said they shouldn't kill the mood by going to get a condom, but your friend didn't want to have unprotected sex. Your friend told their partner they could kiss, touch and make out a little instead, and make sure they have condoms for next time. Now your friend is worried their partner will break up with them because they wouldn't have unprotected sex. Talk to your friend about what happened and support their decision to not have unprotected sex.

5. Practice Empathy:

Your sibling calls you for a ride home. On the way home, they tell you their partner is trying to pressure them into having sex. Your sibling tried to be assertive, but the situation got worse. Their partner wouldn't let it go, and it got difficult to reason with them. What could you say to your sibling to support their decision not to have sex?

6. Present Empathy:

It is Monday morning in the school hallway. You are talking about what happened on the weekend with your friends. One of your friends is bragging about a party where people did drugs, got drunk and had sex. A couple of people are impressed by your friend and make statements that make what was happening at the party sound cool. You are not impressed with the story because you are worried that people were not being safe. What could you say to let your friends know about being safe from things like getting a STBBI/HIV, getting too drunk or having a bad experience with drugs?

7. Practice Negotiation:

Your partner is very possessive and jealous of your friends. They want to be with you all the time. You want to spend time together too, but feel like you need more time with your friends. You really like your partner, but decided to tell them you want more time to yourself.

8. Practice Negotiation:

You and your partner decide that you want to have sex. You want to use a condom, but your partner gives you a lot of excuses not to. (like "We don't have one with us. Let's have sex without a condom this one time." Or "It doesn't feel good with one" etc.) You really want to be protected from STBBIs/HIV and pregnancy. Talk to your partner about what you want, and decide together what to do.
