Being a race of nanites, that look like liquid metal that hardens and softens, the K'zevest after a long time of simplicity, have finally gained sentience and are now working harder to gain more power and become able to go beyond, and spread their homes to far and beyond their birth planet. They are able to assimilate with other kinds of metal and thereby increase their numbers, being on a crafted homeworld, it gives them plenty of metal to work with. Although they are born without the gift of magic, they make up for it, with their inherent features of metal. The pillar of light, is being worshipped as the god that gave birth to them, and that it must be praised.