

Marvel Role-Playing Games Profiles

Rules I'm playing by:

- TSR refers to the original game (Marvel Super Heroes Role-Playing Game); Saga refers to the second game, published by TSR/Saga (Marvel Super Heroes Adventure Game); Marvel as a game descriptor refers to the current game, as it's published by Marvel itself.
- For the original game, no distinction is made between the variations (original, Advanced, kid friendly).
- Characters appear under the most recent name there's a profile for; I note key name differences but not with or without "The"
- See abbreviations for notes on each module.
- Some books are listed with and without a hyphenated module. Sometimes the bulk of the listings appear in a core book in a set but a few characters appear in other books in the set. The default is the book with the most stats, with the hyphenated book being for the remaining stats.
- Armours and vehicles are general only noted if they have their own profile separate from the characters. However if characters are noted within an armour etc entry (common in Weapons Locker), they're noted as a sub-entry
- Page counts are largely meaningless due to different formatting between books so only noted in the broad sense in the abbreviations)
- Assume all entries in allcaps have periods after each letter.
- Sub-classes within a group generally aren't noted but specific characters are.
- I normally list characters as sub-entries of teams only if there's at least a description of the team before the members are listed or if they're really crammed together
- Generally speaking I'm not adding brand new characters created for the games (because no one is likely to search for them). I may consider select new characters if they are variants of existing Marvel characters
- If no stats are given for a character or other profile, or if the reader is told to refer to generic character types, they're not included
- For each character etc, where applicable, profiles for the TSR game are noted alphabetically first, then the Saga game, then the Marvel game
