Who: Open to all, featuring students, clean energy leaders

What:

#CleanEnergyU brings together clean energy leaders with students and faculty across the US to empower them to drive more effectively towards a clean energy future in community. As a virtual dialogue, spanning live tweetathons alongside in-person post-it board and workshop dialogues, #CleanEnergyU has already notched up over 8m media impressions and was top trending on Earth Day 2015. This fall, the #CleanEnergyU dialogue kicks off with its first Climate Week workshop, engaging a live panel of students and clean energy leaders hosted by Mark Kenber, CEO of the Climate Group in New York City. The panel will discuss how campus and community leadership can best lead – together — towards a clean energy future, drawing upon a live workshop Q&A with questions also taken from the #CleanEnergyU twitter feed which is open to everyone virtually. NYC workshop participants can then engage with the panelists directly during a highly interactive poster-style workshop to design and prioritize the most creative solutions across our energy networks that they each believe will bring their communities and campuses towards a clean energy future. This #CWNyc event will be streamed on a webcast, coupled with live tweeting by students and clean energy leaders nationwide via #CleanEnergyU. So engage with some of the most brilliant leaders — and talented millennials — to co-design the most effective ways to bring clean energy solutions successfully to your communities!
