

Your name: _____

Partner's name: _____

In-class activity

Game theory

Your first task is to join with a partner and take turns explaining the games you came up with for your last homework.

Next, you and your partner must then pick one (1) of those games to present together to the class. Be ready to present by being ready to answer the following questions. (Don't write out your answers here because you've already written enough as part of your last homework, but again, be ready to present by being ready to answer these questions.)

- (1.) What real-world situation did you or your partner pick? Briefly describe it.
 - (2.) How did you or your partner use a simple game to describe that situation?
 - (3.) To what extent is the simple game successful at capturing the real-world situation it is trying to describe? In what ways, if any, does it fail to capture that situation?
-

Your name: _____

Partner's name: _____

In-class activity

Game theory

Your first task is to join with a partner and take turns explaining the games you came up with for your last homework.

Next, you and your partner must then pick one (1) of those games to present together to the class. Be ready to present by being ready to answer the following questions. (Don't write out your answers here because you've already written enough as part of your last homework, but again, be ready to present by being ready to answer these questions.)

- (1.) What real-world situation did you or your partner pick? Briefly describe it.
 - (2.) How did you or your partner use a simple game to describe that situation?
 - (3.) To what extent is the simple game successful at capturing the real-world situation it is trying to describe? In what ways, if any, does it fail to capture that situation?
-

