A. Introduction (Times New Roman (12 pt)& Bold)

The Introduction should provide a clear explanation of the main issue discussed in the article. This section should begin with a comprehensive background and a brief literature review that covers existing solutions or methods and findings from relevant previous research. Identify the major limitations of previous studies and explain how this research aims to address these gaps. Additionally, emphasize the scientific contribution or novelty of the research, detailing how it offers a new approach or solution compared to previous studies. Moreover, Author must describe the research methods used in the article. The research methods can be outlined in both the Introduction and Abstract as needed. Ensure to explain how these methods differ from those previously used. For example, you might state, "The novelty of this research significantly contributes to determining the means, size, and function of parliamentary thresholds in legislative elections." At the end of the Introduction, pose the research problem which outlines the aspects to be investigated, potentially presented as a research question or statement. This research problem is optional and depends on the structure of the article.

B. Discussion

This section is the most crucial section of your article. The analysis and discussion should be clear and concise. The results should summarise (scientific) findings rather than providing data in great detail. Please highlight differences between your results or conclusions and the previous publications by other researchers.

Main Headings of Manuscripts

Following the main headings should be provided in the manuscript while preparing. The separation between Main headings, sub-headings and sub-sub headings should not be numbered in the manuscript, but using the separation in the following example:

D. ANALYSIS AND DISCUSSION
1. Sub-Headings
 a. Sub-sub headings
 1) Point headings

Tables and Figures are presented centre and cited in the manuscript. The figures should be readable and at least have a resolution of 300 DPI (Dots Per Inch) for excellent printing quality as shown below:

C. Conclusion

The conclusion should provide a clear explanation that addresses the research objectives. It should be made in one or two paragraphs and does not require a numbering system. Avoid repeating the abstract or summarizing the discussion. Provide a concise and clear explanation of the scientific contribution of the research or how the research provides a new perspective on the topic under study. There is no need to make the substance of laws and regulations or court decisions the subject of the conclusion. End the conclusion with a final statement that reaffirms the importance of your findings and their impact on the field, thus providing a strong and adequate conclusion to your article.

D. Suggestion

Suggestion should include solutions, proposed ideas, or plans for consideration, presented in the form of practical suggestions. Provide a clear explanation of the potential applications and/or recommendations related to the research findings. Recommendations are optional and should be formulated with consideration of the relevance and impact of the proposed ideas on the field of study. Authors are encouraged to present concrete and pragmatic ideas that could stimulate further discussion or future research development.

Acknowledgements

Acknowledge those who contributed to your research, including individuals who supported your study, such as advisors or other supporters, e.g., proofreaders, typists, and suppliers who provided materials.

Grants

Recognize those who supported the funding of your research, such as DIPA PNB/BLU, Faculty of Law, Universitas Lampung.

References

References at the end of the manuscript must be formatted in CHICAGO Citation Style. Cite only sources that you have read and listed in the footnotes. All sources cited in the text must be included in the bibliography, organized alphabetically by the author's last name. Ensure that 80% of the references are journal articles, with no more than 20% being books. Make sure that the references include at least five (5) journals indexed in Scopus.
