

Bunny the adherent

a full biography

Character belongs to, and document written by _bunnyphobe

Content warning: SA/CSA, sex trafficking, selfharm/suicidal ideation, medical malpractise including but not limited to: lobotomy, hypnosis, sexual misconduct; underage sex, sexualisation and rape of minors, transphobia and misgendering, bestiality, and sexual media made of children.

APPEARANCE

You are a bunny girl.

You are tiny compared to others, something that others find to be a charm point of yours. Your eyes, or at least the one that is visible, is a bright ruby red. The other eye is obscured by an eyepatch, but if and when you decide to take it off when alone, all that will stare back at you is an empty socket with a nasty scar where an eyeball once was. You have light, honey-coloured skin and a few charming birthmarks around your chin and lips, as well as a beauty mark accentuating the eye you still have. You have a pair of enormous breasts, and some part of you feels like they weren't always this way. When left natural, your very long two-toned hair reaches the back of your thighs; a gradient from your natural warm black colour to a dusty light pink. Atop your head are a pair of small rabbit ears, and above your large bum rests a fluffy cottontail.

“Whitney’s slut” has been tattooed on your left shoulder. A butterfly is tattooed on your right buttock. Above your crotch lies a pink sigil, something you still have yet to discern where it came from. It doesn’t bother you. The barcode tattoo behind your neck does bother you, however. You just can’t place your finger on why.

EARLY CHILDHOOD

“Bunny” is not his given name. He doesn’t remember it, and the only person who might possibly know what it could be is Briar, who chooses not to tell him.

Born to a single drug-addicted mother, desperate for cash, around the age of four Bunny was sold by her to a man named Briar, who, assumedly unbeknownst to her, owned a large underground sex trafficking ring. He was no stranger to bringing children into this, nor did he have an ounce of care nor mercy.

Very quickly, at this young age, Bunny was broken down. She was a shell of a person and never spoke, never acted up, never cried or complained, past the first few days.

Though at first, Briar found her to be an irritating, whiny brat, that behaviour was quickly disclipined and beaten out of her, both by his own hand and by any client who “used” her for a day.

Before long, she was moulded into the perfect, broken-down little victim. The extent of emotion she would show was when Briar came around, and Bunny desperately cried out to be saved. Though at first, he would brush her off as many of the other victims did the same, at some point Briar began to see something else in her, and felt almost an ounce of pity.

This is why, on the first of January when she turned 12, Briar took her on a “special trip”. As a final, goodbye gift, Bunny was freed, and sent off to the orphanage to live as normal a life she could.

RELEASE

When she was dropped off at the orphanage, Bunny still didn’t have a name. She wasn’t given one for quite some time. And now that she was out of the confines of the underground brothel, Bunny began to express himself.

That starting with demanding to be referred to as a boy. Bailey, his new caretaker, has no interest in fueling these, as he puts it, “delusions”. However, if his behaviour ended at this, perhaps Bunny could have lived as the person he was meant to be.

The issue arose when, upon being enrolled into school, almost immediately Bunny was reported as a “problem child”. Getting into fights, hitting or biting other children, disobeying teachers, skipping classes and not doing class- or homework. Though Bailey might not have cared if this wasn’t brought to his attention, he was livid that his reputation would be sullied by a new brat.

The same day he got a call, instead of being allowed to walk home per usual, instead Bunny was picked up by Bailey himself, who drove him directly to Nightingale Hospital, where a particular doctor was waiting for him.

DOCTOR

This doctor was named Harper, who gave Bunny his name, eventually. Though he treated Bunny's physical health when necessary, the main purpose of being assigned to him was to handle his "mental issues".

At first, he tried simple talk therapy. Asking why he was so aggressive and how he felt day to day, how other people made him feel. However, the young boy refused to cooperate nor give any details about his past. Terrified of the nature of the hospital, terrified of the doctor himself, Bunny only froze up and faced away from Harper each time they were forced to meet.

Harper's attempts became more intensive the more time passed. He dealt with and tried to work through the boy's petulant nature at first, but at some point medication was necessary. Then, Harper felt hypnosis was necessary. Then hands-on, therapeutic massages.

This is when Bunny exploded and attacked the doctor, punching him in the nose and causing the doctor to back off. The visit ended abruptly, and Bunny was shoved out.

A few weeks passed without another therapy session, and Bunny thought he was finally free. However, towards the end of his last year of middle school, Bailey himself threw the boy into his car and drove him to the hospital, shoving him in and leaving without a word. Unbeknownst to Bunny, the two of them had had a long conversation about what the next steps to his treatment would be.

As soon as he was ushered in, the staff all seemed to know what he was here for. Everyone, except Bunny himself. He was dragged into an operating room, and doors were tightly shut, with nobody but Harper, himself, and a few assistants to witness what would happen next.

“This will make everything easier.”

REBIRTH

When Bunny next awoke, he was instead in a normal behavioural patient room, the fact he = was hooked up to an IV bag the only thing that allowed him to even have an ounce of an idea what had just happened to him.

He couldn't remember... anything. Nothing. Not his early childhood, not the last year of freedom, not even the intensive therapy sessions that he'd endured with the doctor. Desperate for answers, he rubbed his eyes, quickly noticing that his right eyeball had less mass than the other. And before he could see anything else, that beautiful blonde doctor turned in his chair and rolled it towards the patient's bed, smiling and holding one hand as he cooed, “Bunny.”

The next several months passed with relative ease. Bunny, as Harper had now named him, had trained every bad behaviour out of him – or rather, it was extracted out of him through surgery. He was now properly responding to therapy, medication, and hypnosis, and was much more friendly and agreeable after the operation. He was left in the care of the hospital for those few months, left in the care of Dr. Harper – someone who was now renowned for being the only person who'd been able to tame the beast.

In lieu of the argumentative, aggressive, violent human that he'd once been, Bunny was now a meek, affectionate, agreeable rabbit girl who kept her mouth shut and did as she was told. Harper had done his job, and he was allowed back into the care of Bailey.

PRESENT DAY

Now a high school freshman at the ripe age of fourteen, Bunny is a completely different person to the child he had been in middle school, to the point almost nobody recognises him as the same kid. His appearance immediately caught a lot of attention – while the child he'd been before always wore ill-fitting, oversized clothing that covered as much skin as physically possible, now, Bunny seemed to opt for clothes that just barely fit the school uniform guidelines. Not to mention, his body. Whether he was simply hiding it before, or Harper had stimulated some sort of physical change was uncertain, but now the rabbit was quite well-developed with a large bust and hips to go along with it.

Rumours spread through the halls rather quickly.

“Hey, isn't that the no-squeal rapetoy?”

“Oh shit, that's the easy fuck. Should I try?”

“Surprised she doesn't have any diseases.”

Despite the nature of these rumours, Bunny always seemed unbothered. They weren't wrong, to be fair. She was an easy fuck, and never cried or complained even when she was raped. It didn't take long for her to become known as the school slut, and after that, those rumours spread through the entire town. Fucktoy.

These rumours caught the attention of a certain student not long after they began circulating. Hell, he wasn't the type to ignore whispers of a busty, attractive little fuckrabbit who seemed to have sex with anyone that passed her by.

Though his reputation was clean, and he was known as a stellar student, Whitney had a dark mean streak beneath that attractive surface. In all fairness, he was quite good at keeping his actions clear, even if his mind was anything but. Something about this damn rabbit, though, god did she do something to him.

The bullying started quickly, with nothing more than slamming the girl against her locker and grabbing her by the chin, muttering that she should keep out of his way if she wanted no trouble. Though he had no intention of following through.. this damn girl was batshit insane.

From that day on, Bunny was constantly vying for his attention. Finding him on the roof during school lunch, finding him in residential alleyways on the weekends, anywhere she could possibly find him she did. Even as his bullying ramped up in intensity, over and over, nothing seemed to scare her off. Something about that captivated Whitney.

His reputation quickly skyrocketed, though not in a good way. Aside from the sex tapes and blackmail videos that Whitney himself shared online, many other sources seemed to have countless absurd and explicit videos of the young girl in precarious situations. It would be more of a shock if a passerby didn't recognise him.

PERSONALITY

Bunny, in the present day, is a ditsy and airheaded young boy without a care in the world. The only things that seems to concern him day to day is seeing his “boyfriend” and bothering him as much as he could, working him up just for a chance at sex with him each and every day.

He laughs at the dumbest jokes, or even the most complex ones – however, it’s likely he doesn’t even understand the ones that require more than a second of thought. It’s a wonder how he has impeccable grades in school, though most students tend to assume he’s sleeping with the teachers. That isn’t out of the question.

Clingy and affectionate, especially to the boy he’s fallen for, Bunny is willing to deal with all and any sort of attention, good or bad. Humiliation, exhibition, rape, nothing is out of the question. So long as he is receiving the attention he craves so badly, Bunny seems to be fully content.

That is, until his mental health seems to reach a summit. At some point, perhaps when he’s run out of his heavy medication, something changes in him. His eyes seem to glaze over and that cheery, peppy, ditsy tone of his seems to vanish – he turns into a husk, a shell of himself. He won't react to anything anyone says, won't respond to provocation, won't cry or smile or show any sort of emotion.

However, after disappearing for a week or two, each time this happens he seems to be back to normal. Nobody but himself, Bailey, and a certain doctor know where he goes during these “blackout periods”.

RELATIONSHIPS

WHITNEY - ♡♡♡♡♡

From the moment they met, despite the circumstances of that meeting, Bunny fell head over heels for Whitney. The only question is as to “why”... Frankly, Bunny himself doesn't even know. However, something that can be picked up easily from an onlooking eye is the fact that Bunny seems to be instantly attached to anyone with a head of blonde hair.

The true reason Bunny is so attracted to him is the fact that he is so hard to get. Bunny is stupid, but he can pick up on the fact that Whitney doesn't care about him, and has no regard for his happiness nor wellbeing. This is something that Bunny finds infatuting. Everyone else around him, though it is technically negative attention, will compliment Bunny and flirt with him. Whitney, however, more often than not will ignore his existence and walk away without a word.

The ruthless sadist in Whitney, though he doesn't have any true compassion nor care for the rabbit he's claimed as his own, does have an innate attraction to him, not just because of his appearance, but also because of the fact that he will never back down or get scared off even when Whitney forces the most unspeakable acts onto him. Bunny will always sit and take whatever Whitney does to him, and will do it with a smile. Whitney, along with Harper, are the two main derivators in Bunny wondering if he really is a boy. Something in him feels like he's not a girl, but Harper has been convincing him it is all in his head, while Whitney flat-out tells him he's a stupid, delusional little girl.

HARPER - ♥♥♥♥♥

Bunny's beloved doctor. Though their relationship started off rocky due to Bunny's hatred and fear of both men and doctors, present-day Bunny is deeply attached to Harper, perhaps moreso than his partner. From the moment he laid eyes on the doctor after his "rebirth", Bunny became dependent on the doctor like a newborn chick to its mother.

Ever since that day, Bunny has been entirely obedient and careless when it comes to Harper. He will follow any instruction or direction given to him by the doctor, without question and without complaint.

Harper finds Bunny to be his greatest achievement. Turning a rabid dog into a docile little rabbit is perhaps the most impeccable transformation he has managed in his entire career. Though, of course, even rabbits have their moments. When Bunny has a hiccup in his agreeable nature, Harper has since communicated to anyone around him that he is to be taken directly to Harper. After this point, Bunny is admitted into the asylum, and after a week or two of intensive care, he is free to go back to his normal life.

His affections for Bunny do not lie further than a "trophy" of sorts. While he is proud of his creation, Bunny can be too attached for his liking. While he will not push him away, as he does not want to reprimand such good behaviour, Harper keeps his distance when possible so he can create "relationships" with the other members of the town.

AVERY - ♥♥♥♥♥

Bunny's sugar daddy. Though the money is nice, Bunny is more fixated on the (seemingly) unconditional attention that he gives him. Avery, in contrast to Whitney, is gentle and patient with Bunny, smothers him in compliments and praise, and even pays him for his time. When Bunny is with him, he feels like a person worth something.

Of course, this love and patience is conditional. If Avery were to ever catch sight of Bunny during one of his "episodes", if Bunny were to ever act up or deny him of what he wanted, perhaps Bunny's affections for him would be cut a little short. To Avery, Bunny is nothing more than attractive arm candy who fits his particular tastes. A cute, young little thing with an attractive figure, obedient and keeps her mouth shut when they're in public – and that is exactly what Bunny fits.

If Bunny were to ever claim to be male in Avery's earshot, his interest may tank. Of course, he wouldn't call him as he wanted, nor would he even consider it as fact, Avery is not attracted to a person so delusional they are willing to convince themselves they are the opposite gender. His attraction to mental illness covers only those that will make them easier to manipulate.

BRIAR - ♥♥♥♥

Briar, past their relationship in the distant past that Bunny no longer remembers, is now back in Bunny's life by virtue of the rabbit's new personality. Hell, Briar expected the child to stay celibate for the rest of his life after what had happened to him, but now he was working under Briar in his overworld brothel, none the wiser to the life he'd subjected him to when he was a child.

Bunny has no memory of their distant past. Instead, he is only cognisant of the handsome, charming facade that he puts on in the brothel when he makes an appearance. Though Briar is hard to get, Bunny swoons when he walks by. Perhaps the only reason his affection isn't more intense is because he doesn't resemble his doctor.

Briar has every memory of their distant past together. Though he didn't immediately recognise the boy, considering he'd grown rabbit ears, a pair of tits, and a confident personality, that face was one he couldn't forget, considering she was the only little girl he'd ever had an ounce of pity for. Just to make sure he was remembering properly, Briar once offered to put up Bunny's hair, just as an excuse to see if that tattoo was on the back of his neck. By god.

Briar isn't entirely sure why he has a soft spot for Bunny. Perhaps it's the fact that he reminds him of his dear young friend... He doesn't care to think about it. Despite the nature of the work he is employing Bunny under, he sees him as somewhat of a daughter figure.

BLACK WOLF - ♥♥♥♥

Bunny's unguilty pleasure. He enjoys the wordless interactions, the animalistic nature of his affection. When Bunny chooses to spend time at the wolf cave, it's usually when he wants a break from the insanity of the rest of the world. Life in the cave is slow and simple, and sometimes that is just what he needs.

Black Wolf finds Bunny to be a cute mate, and a perfect mother to its pups. Their relationship is stable and simple, and both of them like it that way.

KYLAR - ♥♥♥

Bunny finds Kylar cute, and is willing to go along with what he wants – only when Whitney isn't an option. If Kylar asks him to spend time with him, and Whitney is nowhere to be seen, Bunny will agree. But if Whitney is somewhere nearby, or Bunny knows where he is, he will shake Kylar off and tell him "next time".

At the start, Kylar looked a lot like himself. Cute and girly with little twintails and legwarmers much like his own, Bunny even thought he was another girl. This made him confident in gossiping and chatting with him.

However, as Bunny got further and further away from him, Kylar began to take inspiration from Whitney's appearance in an attempt to reel him back in. When this doesn't work, Kylar does not hesitate to kidnap Bunny and attempt to marry him. This has resulted in Bunny's arrest at least once.

SYDNEY - ♥♥♥

Bunny finds his chaste and prudish nature confusing. When he's been groomed into sex from the moment he was reborn, a person who is completely against the idea of it in the first place is so alien to him that it almost makes him more interested.

Even without intentionally pushing for it, Bunny is perhaps the main reason that Sydney becomes "corrupted" and forgoes some of his views on sex and modesty. He became frustrated with Sydney's refusal to proposition him, his coy and prudish nature even when Bunny offered himself to him, and so, with some coaxing and some, admittedly, forcing himself onto him just a bit, eventually Sydney falls.

Sydney, at first, wished he could save Bunny. He could tell the impure nature of the city they lived in had made him the way he was, and he attempted multiple times to get Bunny to attend church with him, but instead he always was more interested in helping set up his father's shop.

By the time he's corrupted, Sydney no longer minds Bunny's scandalous and scanty nature. In fact, he finds it more empowering than anything, and takes some notes from Bunny's personality.

BAILEY - ♡♡

Bunny has attempted several times to come on to Bailey after his rebirth. However, unfortunately, Bailey is completely disinterested, and cares only for the money that he rakes in each week from his tenant.

Though he does experience a great deal of attraction to Bailey, the complete lack of affection and attention, negative nor positive, does not interest Bunny enough to persist as he does with Whitney. Instead, he is a bit scared of Bailey, perhaps only subconsciously.

NIKI - ♡♡

Their relationship is almost purely transactional. Bunny enjoys the attention that the photoshoots give him, and also enjoys the eyes of the camera and the staff on him while he is being photographed and filmed.

Bunny gets the attention he desires, and Niki gets the photos and notoriety he desires from Bunny agreeing to even the most risqué photoshoots. It is a mutually beneficial, but purely business, relationship.