Hey [Name],

Quick question...

How many HOURS have you wasted trying to guess which KDP niche might actually sell?

Digging through Amazon... checking BSRs... wondering if a niche is totally saturated or secretly profitable. It’s enough to make most people quit before they ever hit “Publish.”

That’s why I’m excited about a simple Chrome extension called LowComp Book Hunter.

Pop in a niche idea like:

“Chores chart for teens”

“Dog walker logbook”

“Prayer journal for busy moms”

...and LowComp Book Hunter instantly helps you spot low-competition, high-demand niches so you know which ideas deserve a closer look.

This tool is designed to point you in the right direction, so you can then hop over to Amazon KDP to refine your search and validate the niche properly. Just like any online niche service, results can become outdated or change at any time—so always double-check before you publish.

Here’s the best part:

Most KDP niche tools charge $50–$150 per month just to access their data. LowComp Book Hunter is a one-time investment, with unlimited searches, and you can even get PLR rights so you can resell it as your own.

If you want faster research and smarter KDP decisions... this is a no-brainer.

My new shortcut for finding low-comp KDP ideas

This makes KDP research actually FUN

Email body (≈250 words):

Hey [Name],

What if KDP niche research took minutes instead of hours?

Most people overcomplicate it: spreadsheets, color codes, 20 tabs, and still no clue if the niche will ever make a sale.

Let me give you something way easier: LowComp Book Hunter – a Chrome Extension built specifically to speed up KDP niche discovery.

You type in a phrase like:

“Camping planner for families”

“Anxiety journal for teens”

“Wedding vendor contact log”

Hit search, and LowComp Book Hunter helps you quickly identify where demand is strong and competition is low, so you know which ideas deserve a deeper dive on Amazon KDP.

This tool is meant to point you toward promising niches, so you can refine and validate directly on Amazon. As with any niche tool, markets shift and results can change at any time—so always cross-check before publishing.

Here’s why internet marketers love it:

One-time payment (no $50–$150/month subscription nonsense)

Unlimited searches – hammer it with ideas all day long

Option for PLR rights so you can resell it as your own software

Use it to test ideas, build micro-brands, or map out an entire year of low-content books in one sitting.

If KDP is anywhere in your income plan, you'll want this in your toolbox:

Swipe 3 – “Stop paying $150/month for what this does once”

Subject ideas:

Why pay $150/mo when you can own this?

Fire your expensive KDP niche tool

One tool you pay for ONCE (KDP)

Email body

Hey [Name],

Let's talk about something that quietly eats your profits...

Monthly software fees.

A lot of KDP niche tools run $50 to $150 per month. That's $600–$1,800 a year just to look at niche data.

Now compare that with LowComp Book Hunter – a powerful Chrome Extension you pay for once, use for as long as you want, and run unlimited niche searches.

Here's what it does for you:

You enter niche ideas like “truckers mileage logbook,” “gratitude journal for nurses,” or “homeschool assignment tracker.”

LowComp Book Hunter helps you quickly spot low-competition opportunities where there's still buyer demand.

You then go to Amazon KDP to refine and confirm the niche before you commit.

This tool is created to guide your research, not replace your judgment. Markets move, trends shift, and results can change at any time—so always verify the niche on Amazon before you publish.

On top of that, there's a huge bonus:

You can get PLR rights, which means you're not just using the software... you can rebrand and resell it as your own product and keep the profits.

So instead of sinking more money into monthly tools, you can own a KDP niche finder AND have a digital asset you can sell.

Sound smart? I think so.

Swipe 4 – “From idea to validated niche in record time”

Subject ideas:

From “idea” to “publishable niche” in record time

The missing step in your KDP workflow

This bridges the gap between ideas and sales

Email body

Hey [Name],

If you're like most marketers, you probably have more KDP ideas than time.

The real problem isn't ideas... it's validation.

Which ones are too competitive?

Which ones might actually sell?

Which ones are worth paying a designer for?

That's where LowComp Book Hunter comes in. It's a slick Chrome Extension that turns raw ideas into data-backed niche candidates in just a few clicks.

Simply plug in phrases like:

“Soccer practice planner for kids”

“Daily sales tracker for Etsy sellers”

“Bible study notes journal”

LowComp Book Hunter then helps you identify niches where competition is lower and demand still exists—so you can jump over to Amazon KDP and dig deeper before committing.

The goal is to point you toward promising angles faster. Just remember: results and markets can change at any time, so always refine your search and verify directly on Amazon before publishing.

Why I like it:

You get unlimited searches

You pay once (no $50–$150 monthly fee)

You can even secure PLR rights and resell the tool as your own software offer

Use it to plan out journals, planners, logbooks, trackers, and more—without wasting days on guesswork.

If you want a faster, smarter way to find your next KDP winner...

Swipe 5 – “Turn this tool into TWO income streams”

Subject ideas:

One tool, two income streams (KDP + software)

Use this AND resell it for profits

Turn your niche finder into a product

Email body
Hey [Name],

What if a single tool could open up two income streams at once?

That's what I see when I look at LowComp Book Hunter.

First, it's a Chrome Extension that helps you quickly uncover low-competition KDP niches. You enter your ideas, and it helps point you toward markets where demand is strong but competition isn't insane. Then you take those promising ideas to Amazon KDP, refine the search, and validate before you publish.

As with anything in the niche research world, results can change or become outdated over time—so always double-check on Amazon before investing in covers or interiors.

But here's the fun part...

With the right license, LowComp Book Hunter includes PLR rights. That means you can:

Rebrand it with your own name and logo

Create your own sales page and funnel

Sell access to it as your own KDP niche tool

So you:

- ① Use it to find profitable niches for your own journals, logbooks, planners, etc.
- ② Turn around and sell the software itself to other KDP publishers and marketers.

Meanwhile, you're not locked into some $50–$150/month subscription. You pay once, and you're set, with unlimited searches.

If you like stacking income streams instead of just hoping for royalties... this belongs in your arsenal.
