

As of today, I'm quitting your company. I got an offer from another company that is just too much money to pass up. I'm not giving you two weeks' notice- I'm starting at my new job tomorrow morning. That is an unprofessional thing to do, but it is retribution for all the times you have been unprofessional with me.

I tried to work with you, and it just didn't work out. You have a severe temper problem that is completely unwarranted. I'm surprised your company has lasted as long as it has. You described yourself as "relaxed" the other day in the meeting. When are you ever relaxed? You are constantly raising your voice to all of your employees. I am a 30-year-old IT professional, not an 8-year-old kid- I deserve more respect than that you never gave me.

What you said at the meeting the other day was really the tipping point for me. Despite busting my ass for you these past 9 months or so, you decided to "reset the clock" and tell me that Thursday was my first day at your company. Do you remember my interview? You told me, "Don't worry about the salary; you'll be happy with the money." Firstly, you ended up paying me LESS per hour than my old job at a non-profit company. Second, you "reset the clock" so my one-year anniversary with you in March would mean nothing. 9 months of nothing but hard work for you, and you act like it didn't happen. That is ridiculous, unfair, and CHEAP. And why? Because I took 2 days off. 2 days where there was nothing on the schedule for me anyway. 2 days of my own time- you had long since relieved me of my promised vacation days, so it wasn't even like you had to pay me for the days or anything. Nice way to treat your employees.

You are a terrible boss, and I hope I never again work for someone who is that unprofessional, unfair, and emotionally unstable again. You have created an atmosphere of fear at your own company. I was literally scared to make any decision because you made me feel like no matter what I did it was the wrong thing to do and no matter what I did I would get yelled at for it.

I suppose I should thank you for showing me exactly what NOT to do as an IT professional. You assume your clients are stupid, treat them that way, and don't think they don't notice. You may have noticed that NONE of your clients ever had a bad word to say about me- that should have told you something about me, but apparently it didn't.

I have your phone, you have my last check. As soon as I receive my last check, I will send your phone back to you. The 15th is Tuesday- I expect my check to be deposited or mailed to me on that day. Your phone, phone holder and charger will be mailed back to you once that happens.
