

Before COVID-19 struck, we already knew of the Amy Coopers of the world. We already knew of the “noise complaints” our neighbors submit when we play music they don’t recognize or speak in languages they don’t understand. We already knew of the cruel irony of being targeted as “suspicious” for walking around alone, as well as for walking with too many people who look like us. Before Ahmaud Arbery, Breonna Taylor, and George Floyd were murdered, we already knew that whether we were sleeping in our homes or jogging down the street, we could be killed indiscriminately in the name of the law. We already knew that this nation was willing to deploy an army to defend private property from protesters, yet turn its back on police brutality.

Despite all that we knew about the ways in which police officers escalate rather than resolve conflicts, about how they rarely solve the crimes that are reported to them but routinely intimidate and harass members of marginalized communities, Stanford University has still invited them to campus in ever-increasing numbers.

Why the drastic increase in police presence at a time when the on-campus student population has significantly decreased due to students being asked to shelter-in-place elsewhere? The answer, we assume, is to enforce the local shelter-in-place and social distancing ordinances. The effort, we assume, was well-intentioned: an attempt to slow the spread of the novel coronavirus. We know that COVID-19 is dangerous. In fact, Black and Brown people know it better than anyone, as our communities have been ravaged by the virus — a culmination of working more essential but low-paid jobs, inadequate access to healthcare, and general disinvestment from our communities. But we also know the dangers of the police. To those of us from communities that are Black, Brown, queer, trans, or poor, communities that are harassed, patrolled, beaten, and killed by police on a daily basis, we recognize such a turn towards heightened policing and surveillance as the real and present danger that it is, given that “regardless of who has or has not committed crimes, punishment, in brief, can be seen more as a consequence of racialized surveillance.”

By inviting increased police presence to a nearly empty campus, Stanford has made this university less safe for its most vulnerable students — students who for any number of reasons believed returning home would not be safe, or affordable, possible due to closed borders, or conducive to learning. By asking students to contact police, even on their non-emergency number, in order to dispatch officers to students’ homes, Stanford has demonstrated at the very least its gross ignorance, or cold indifference to, police brutality in the United States. We appreciate Stanford’s letter to students regarding the injustice that took place in Minneapolis, but we also push the University to not just make symbolic statements, but to stand with us when we say Stanford’s reliance on police does not make us feel protected, and we deserve to feel safe in our own homes and at our own school. Given the University’s contract with its police union is set to end on July 31, 2020, the time for the University to stand with us, and stand up for us, is right now. President Obama reminded the nation on June 3 of the need to “commit to report on planned reforms,” and President Tessier-Lavigne should, like San Francisco Mayor London Breed, commit to the pledge by the September 1, 2020 deadline. Further, we demand:

Dismiss and Disarm. There is no need for non-Stanford police on campus. Any officers for which the University is not liable should not have a permanent presence on campus. Stanford has its own police department, over which Stanford University has more direct control. Further, we call for the disarmament of all Stanford police. They have no reason to carry firearms, and it increases the chance that deadly force will be used. In countries where police do not carry weapons while on patrol, the number of people killed by the police decreases.

Defund and Divert. Stanford has repeatedly reminded students and workers of the economic crisis the University is experiencing and the cuts to financial aid, funding, and jobs that will occur as a result. We call on Stanford to divert funds within its budget away from police, and allocate them to areas that are actually proven to reduce crime and its effects. Given more than a third of the offenses reported to Stanford police are sex offenses, resources should be diverted to anti-rape culture education, training, and the SARA center. After sex offenses, burglaries and vehicle related thefts are most prevalent on campus. Rather than focus University resources on the rarely fruitful task of finding stolen property, the University might consider environmental design solutions, as well as a fund to help students replace stolen property. Further, we call on Stanford to use funds in its police budget to instead invest in increasing financial aid, stemming the rising cost of campus housing, investing in the local community, and providing financial resources for workers whose jobs have been lost due to COVID-19.

Desist and De-escalate. Any and all law enforcement or campus security force should be trained at least twice annually in how to de-escalate a situation. But just as crucially, faculty, students, and staff must be provided crisis de-escalation training in the form of workshops and access to further literature and resources on the subject. For maximum efficiency, we propose that these trainings be added to the Orientation period for all graduate and undergraduate students. These trainings should be led by student leaders, compensated for their time, or BGSA-approved local organizations. Stanford should also commit resources to support community-led alternatives to policing. Finally, the University should reframe its “See Something Say Something” guidelines on reporting suspicious activity to the police.

Disclose. We cannot expect to hold SUDPS accountable when there is no transparency. SUDPS must explicitly lay out its policies on deadly force, use of force, ethical behavior, and commitment to de-escalation techniques. An example can be found here. There must also be a confidential reporting system for people to document their negative interactions with law enforcement. To accompany this system, there must also be a detailed procedure regarding both the complaint process and the outcomes, and it must be easily accessible to the Stanford community. Stanford must also create an independent civilian oversight board comprised of students, faculty, and staff. This board should report all uses of force and provide recommendations that the Chief of Police must consider when deciding on repercussions. The board’s findings should be public. Finally, Stanford must make clear the values and terms of its contracts with outside police departments and how much money is allocated from the University's budget to the Stanford University Department of Public Safety.

This is just a part of the work required to begin making Stanford an equitable, accountable, and responsible institution. To endorse these demands, as an individual or an organization, click here.
