Due to the recent merger of the Reformists of Northern Ireland and the Irish Parliamentary Party, we would like to outline the future of the IPP and its ideology. We hope that through this merger we will be able to work towards the best future for Northern Ireland. While some policies will have to change we hope that the integrity of both the IPP and RNI will be maintained ideologically.

Striving to maintain both party's ideology is not a simple task and concessions on both sides will have to be made. That is why we have worked out a centrist vision for the future of the IPP. We will remain a Nationalist party and we will push for a border poll, however we will respect the results of the referendum no matter what the outcome. Whether the people of Northern Ireland choose to leave the Union or remain, we will respect the people's voices and their democratic decision. This is a compromise we both believe will be beneficial for the people of Northern Ireland.

The economic policies of the Reformists of Northern Ireland will be adopted into the policies of the Irish Parliamentary Party. This means lowering taxes, investing in education, investing in infrastructure, and working to help our farmers. We believe that lowering taxes will boost our economy, investing in education will prepare our students for going out into a more competitive workforce, and investing in infrastructure will help the functionality of our economy improve. Helping our farmers will ensure that we are not forgetting those who inhabit a majority of our country's land. We believe that these policies will better our country now and far off into our future.

The social policies of the Irish Parliamentary Party will remain the same. The IPP are a party supportive of EU membership, but we realise that Northern Ireland voted to leave, and with the backstop arrangement organised by HM Government, we plan to aid them in the transition process as best we can. We will contribute fully to the Royal Commission on Devolution, unlike other nationalist parties who seek to derail it. We will make sure that the Executive and the government in Westminster have continuously frequent communication on Brexit, and other matters, to make sure that relations between the two do not turn sour.

We will continue to aim to have a carbon-neutral Northern Ireland by 2030. We will look to create a cross border plan to fight climate change, and work together with the Republic of Ireland to have the entire island of Ireland carbon-neutral by 2030. Along with a cross border plan to fight climate change, we would like to create a cross border plan to create more nuclear energy opportunities across Northern Ireland and the Republic.

We will work to promote a tolerant, open Northern Ireland, and work to make sure that hatefulness is not promoted here. We will work hard to crack down on hate crimes and make sure everyone can live a free, happy life in Northern Ireland.

We believe that these policies are in the best interests of Northern Ireland and its people. Along with these policies we will fight for further devolution to the Northern Irish Assembly.

Now that we have outlined our policies for the future of the party, we are ready to enter the next General Election as one united party that works for the people of Northern Ireland. We will fight for Northern Ireland's voice and rights as a country of the United Kingdom.
