Ways to learn another language

Learning another language is a trouble for some people. In order to make it easier, many people have followed this procedure to learn a new language: mastering grammar and writing skills, constantly practicing listening and speaking proficiencies, and also expanding their vocabulary bank.

To master grammar and writing skills, people have tried to learn verb tenses and understand sentences structures so they know how the sentences are made and organize. They also need to practicing writing skills after learning grammar so they won't forget what they have learnt, such as write a few sentences in different tenses. Reading is also work for people who want to improve their grammar and writing skills. While reading, they can also learn new writing styles and verb tenses from the author.

With the purpose of learning a new language, practicing listening and speaking skills are needed too. People usually listen to music, watch movies, news and cartoons in the language that they want to learn so they can get used to a new pronunciation. But listening is not good enough, speaking is one of the best way to capture new things. While people are talking to each other, they also use their listening skills to communicate. Lots of language professors encourage people who want to learn a new language to feel free to ask question and speak up in class. There are so many positive effects for people who are active speakers. People who usually communicate are faster learners because they are not afraid of making mistakes and learn more things when they make mistakes.

Beside those four skills, vocabularies are also required for people who want to discover a new language. To enrich their vocabularies, some people have tried to learn word structures and the meaning of those structures, such as suffixes and prefixes in English. A previous generation had already tried so many ways to learn new words, and those ways seemed to be working until now. They used flash cards and notes to learn a big amount of words. They also linked words to any events or places that were familiar to them in order to make it easier to remember.

In conclusion, many people have succeeded in learning a new language by followed this procedure: mastering grammar and writing skills, constantly practicing listening and speaking proficiencies and expanding their vocabulary bank. Those procedures are also work for me. Do you want to give it a try?
