There is a lot more that goes into your dog's well being. Good teeth, shiny coat, clear and bright eyes, lean body free of fat, good digestive system and lots of energy. If this is what you seek for your best friend, then you must begin with what he or she eats. To do this properly, you need to understand terms that are used in the ingredients on the bag of food.

If it says "all natural", does that mean it is a good ingredient? Or if it says "high in protein", is this a good thing. The answer to these questions, and many, many more, can be answered by viewing AAFCO Definitions of Dog Food Ingredients. This will explain the misguided and confusing terms used in the dog food industry.

Are there ingredients you should definitely avoid feeding your best friend. You bet there are, and many, many more than you can imagine. There are many harmful and even fatal ingredients that need to be avoided at all costs. This is what I will show you how to do, so, you can proceed with confidence as to what is healthy, and what is not healthy for you dog.

What is the best dog food? How do you know, with every manufacturer all claiming to produce the "best dog food" on the market? Kind of confusing isn't it? Maybe, it's the brands with the biggest budgets that can advertise, market and promote their product. You guessed it, this does not mean it is the best dog food. You could go crazy, researching, reading and the like from all of the large budget manufacturer's, that are yielding huge profits from inferior and very low grade dog food. Why, it is the ingredients being used.

Don't fall into the old marketing scheme that dogs should only eat dog food. Not true at all. In fact, they do their best to confuse and misdirect the consumer. The truth is, you have a host of different scenarios you can avail yourself of. Such as a commercial natural ingredient, organic, raw, frozen, freeze dried or a combination of these foods. It doesn't matter whether you purchase pre packaged foods that are specially formulated for a dogs nutritional needs, or if you produce your own meals using the proper ingredients. This I will also teach you.

The key point to remember is, that in order to obtain good health for your pet, you must first provide good nutrition and avoid dangerous ingredients. Good nutrition lowers vet bills and avoids many health problems caused by an inferior product. Most owners think that offering such high quality foods will be too costly and unaffordable for them. Not in the long run, and not if you wish the best for your friend.
