Notes on syntax / approach

- How to create issue templates
 - Through Github site
 - Configuring issue templates for your repository (github.com)
 - Manually
 - Create folder called "ISSUE_TEMPLATES"
 - Add markdown files with a YAML header/front matter
 - Example:
 - ---
 - name: Bug report
 - about: Create a report to help us improve
 - title: "
 - labels: "
 - assignees: "
 - ---
- Yamil: We can use HTML comments syntax to create instructions for how to use the issue templates, but that will not show up in the resulting issue.
- Advance tricks
 - You can pre-assign "tags" to new issues
 - You can pre-assign a github user/group to new issues
- Sample issue templates from other projects

- To ponder
 - Yamil: What is the difference between a bug and an issue?
 - Yamil: Do we need to consolidate the content in these pages a bit?

What steps does it take to reproduce the issue?

* When does this issue occur?

* Which page does it occur on?

* What happens?

* To whom does it occur (anonymous visitor, editor, administrator)?

* What did you expect to happen?

Which version of Islandora are you using?

No matter the issue, screenshots are always welcome.

To add a screenshot, please use one of the following formats and/or methods described here:

2) Use cases template

- To ponder
 - Yamil: What is the difference between use case and feature request?
 - Answer from Rosie from mailing list:
 - <https://groups.google.com/g/islandora/c/-etEpGC02-I>
 - Use Case: focuses on who the actor is and what task they need to accomplish. Not the same as a Feature Request or Enhancement, which are more specific about implementation.
 - Yamil: Should we use Markdown table syntax in the Github issue template?
 - I am concerned that it might be tricky for those new to Markdown table syntax

Version 1: without Markdown table syntax

name: Use Cases

about: Create a Use Case to help us improve???

title: 'Use Case:'???

Version 2: with Markdown table syntax

- Based on content from here...

- Yamil: Concerned that the use of Markdown table syntax will be confusing to those unfamiliar with Markdown.
