

Problem: drop 1 of my courses to make more time for my business. The problem is that essentially means I'm giving up Engineering.

Quality Question: what would future me be most proud of?

Insights

- With time-aikido and intricate management, I can give 3 hours a day to copywriting. Dropping 1 course will take me to 5 hours.
- Dropping it now without school starting yet will feel cowardly.
- I would have to be dishonest to my parents, as I know they will frown upon it.
- He would want to take the brave decision.
- And he would want to follow his spirit and soul over anything else. He has seen how, in my recent history, following my "logic" only has failed me. My soul and spirit are my most prized possession.
- On a recent call, Prof. Andrew detailed how success is possible either way, regardless of time and circumstance.
- Another issue is that once I do become successful copywriting, I am gonna NEED more time anyway. So in any case, I'm gonna have to give school up for the business.
- But I can't lie. Additionally, I have to still be a professional in all realms.
- Conclusion: give my all to both. I will reach my 3-6 month destination regardless. New goals and strategies will be defined from there.
