

Height: 42m (137ft)

Weight: 15,000 tons

Sex: Male

Species: Pseudo-reptilian mammaloid monster

Diet: Hypercarnivore

Strength: 4

Defense: 4

Ranged: 0

Speed: 6

Intelligence: 4

Special: 6

Moveset:

-Heat resistant fur and skin which would have allowed Dragule a degree of protection from Baronga's Geothermal Heatwave. This adaptation would also allow Dragule to thrive in extremely hot environments.

-Immense strength befitting a giant monster. Able to tear apart buildings and natural obstacles with ease.

-Raptorial dorsal limbs allow Dragule to attack an enemy while leaving his forearms free. Dragule's kind use these appendages to hunt, executing lightning-fast stabbing thrusts to impale prey and reel it into their waiting grasp. These limbs are tipped with diamond-hard keratin spikes specifically evolved to pierce into the softer parts of Baronga's species. Even at his small size, Dragule is able to draw blood with these weapons after repeated strikes.

-Sharp claws on hands and feet with a similar density and sharpness as those found on Dragule's raptorial dorsal limbs.

-Spontaneous adaptation allows Dragule and other members of his kind to rapidly adapt to hostile environmental conditions. What would take hundreds or even thousands of years occurs within decades.

-Neurotoxic venom in saliva that causes victims to become increasingly weak until they become completely paralyzed and enter cardiac arrest. This ensures that even if prey survives an encounter with Dragule, it won't escape very far.

-Unhinging jaws to enable Dragule to swallow large quantities of food in one gulp.

Weakness:

-Though he is a nightmarish creature to behold if one is smaller than him, Dragule poses little threat to bigger monsters due to him being merely an adolescent.

-Dragule is incredibly reckless, and will even attempt to attack things larger than him. This was a key factor in his demise.

-Like the rest of his kind, Dragule's heat-resistant fur would have only been able to withstand short bursts of the Geothermal Heatwave. Anything more than a few seconds of exposure risks burning them alive.

-Being nocturnal, cave-dwelling creatures, Dragule and his clan are sensitive to bright lights. Intense enough light shone in their eyes can even force them to retreat.

History:

Dragule was an adolescent predator from a bizarre race of pseudo-reptilian mammals native to the underground realm of The Subterrain. Like an invasive species, his kind ravaged ecosystems, consuming all available prey before moving to the next. Dragule and his guardian, Garugolis, were drawn to the surface by the same mining operations that had awakened Baronga. However, unlike Baronga, who sought only to protect his territory, Garugolis and Dragule saw the surface as an untapped hunting ground. Dragule, in particular, was malicious and sadistic, often tormenting his prey—human or animal—before consuming them. He began by preying on isolated farms and homes, but his appetite for bloodshed soon grew, leading him to attack small communities and crowded gatherings.

Dragule's killing spree reached its peak on July 4th, when he ambushed attendees of a fireworks celebration. Dozens of people were killed or devoured before fireworks aimed at his face forced him to retreat. Two days later, Dragule struck again, this time at a mineral refinery near Mt. Tarwell. It was here he encountered Baronga, who had also come to destroy the facility. Bewildered by his massive opponent, Dragule hesitated but quickly turned violent, launching an aggressive attack. His smaller size and speed made him a frustrating adversary, but he was no match for Baronga's sheer strength. The colossal beast impaled Dragule through the chest with his claws, then drove them through his abdomen before hurling the young monster's body into the refinery. The resulting explosion consumed Dragule in flames, marking the end of his rampage.

The following day, Dragule's remains were recovered and transported to a secured hangar at Fort Lazarus, located just miles from Carter City. During the autopsy, scientists discovered powerful neurotoxins in Dragule's saliva—substances so potent they theorized they could weaken, if not kill, a creature as formidable as Baronga. Over four days, the venom glands were carefully extracted, and the harvested toxin was refined and loaded into a missile. On the night of July 11th, this venom-laden weapon was deployed against Baronga. While it failed to kill the massive creature outright, it left him significantly weakened. This vulnerability ultimately allowed Garugolis to exact vengeance, seemingly defeating Baronga in battle. In a way, Dragule's lethal potential had reached beyond the grave, playing a pivotal role in the outcome of their conflict. After the battle of Carter City, blood and tissue samples would be sent off to the Tsuburaya Institute for Superfauna Research for further analysis, while the rest of the body was destroyed when it was dumped into the mouth of Mt. Tarwell.