"I was born in Atchison, Kansas, on July 24, 1897. Growing up in a small town didn't stop me from dreaming big. My family moved around a lot, but I was always curious and adventurous. One interesting fact is that I built my own roller coaster in the backyard.

As a child, I loved exploring and reading adventure books. I was always curious about the world beyond my backyard.

Initially, I didn't dream of becoming an aviator. I was more interested in adventure and exploration. It wasn't until I attended an air show in 1920 that I fell in love with flying. I earned my pilot's license in 1923, becoming the 16th woman to do so.

I flew a Lockheed Vega, a remarkable plane for its time. It was robust and reliable, perfect for long solo flights. Innovation like this made my journeys possible.

Flying felt like freedom to me. Up in the sky, I felt a sense of peace and wonder, like anything was possible.

I visited many fascinating places during my flights. One memorable destination was the island of Hawaii, where I landed during an attempt to travel around the globe. I also visited Mexico City and Paris and I even reached the island of New Guinea, near Australia.

My family was supportive, but they also worried about the risks. I was determined, and their encouragement helped me pursue my passion.

I did feel scared at times, especially with the unknown of flying over the ocean. But I learnt to manage my fear and focus on my goal. Facing fear is part of pursuing big dreams.

The details of my disappearance over the Pacific Ocean in 1937 remain a mystery. Many believe it was due to navigation errors or running out of fuel. Despite extensive searches, the exact cause of the crash is unknown. However, my legacy focuses on courage and exploration. I was always pushing boundaries and exploring my possibilities. Pursuing dreams often involves facing the unknown."
