

The United States of America is a constitutional federal republic functioning as a representative democracy

Constitutional	The government's power and scope are defined and limited in a foundational legal document.
Federal	Power is divided and shared between a central, national government and individual state governments.
Republic	The government is run by elected officials (no monarchs)
Representative Democracy	Eligible citizens elect representatives to make laws and govern on their behalf