More Montessori Information - *Why we do what we do

You may have noticed that there are a few unique items listed on the school supply list. These are traditional to a Montessori classroom and support specific goals.

Small Indoor Plant

The Montessori classroom is the living space for children and plants are often a piece in completing the space. Bringing plants into the classroom also gives children another opportunity to care for their environment. Learning how to care for plants is a core Practice Life activity as children are responsible for watering and dusting each plant. The learning opportunity transitions into the classroom Montessori work of the Botany cabinet as well as more in depth care including repotting and finding the perfect space for a plant to flourish and grow. Plants also provide a beautiful symbiotic relationship with us caring for plants and plants caring for us through fresh air and purification.

Inside Shoes/Slippers

A Montessori classroom traditionally has children and teachers/guides wear different shoes or slippers for use in the indoor space. This practice promotes cleanliness in the classroom and creates an active transition between the outside world and the inside space. The act of removing outdoor shoes and putting on a different pair of shoes that is specifically designated for indoor use signals children to switch gears in rhythm and place. It is a visual and physical gate between the two spaces and reinforces the change in behavior and expectations that are part moving from outdoor to indoor.

Lace Up Shoes

Encouraging independence in children is a core principle of Montessori education. It fosters confidence, teaches a child responsibility for themselves (and their space) and builds important life skills. One of the key goals of Montessori education is to teach children to be able to do things for themselves. In a Montessori classroom, independence is an ongoing and organic process. As a child learns to pour water, put on their own shoes and clean their own workspace, they become more confident and independent, all of which lead to ongoing benefits throughout their childhood and life. Students are provided with daily opportunities for independent and self-directed learning and the independent task of being able to put on their shoes supports and encourages this independence.
