Can I repair my garage door myself if its been damaged by severe weather?

Yes, some minor repairs such as replacing worn weather stripping, realigning sensors, or fixing dents can be done DIY. However, significant damage especially related to springs and cables should be handled by professionals for safety reasons.

What tools do I need for basic DIY garage door maintenance to protect against harsh weather conditions?

Basic tools include a socket wrench set for tightening bolts and nuts, pliers for adjusting components, a screwdriver for hinge and roller maintenance, lubricant (like silicone spray) for moving parts, and replacement weather stripping if needed.

When should I call a professional instead of attempting DIY repairs on my weather-damaged garage door?

Call a professional when the repair involves high-tension parts like torsion springs or cables since these require special tools and knowledge due to the danger they pose. Also seek help if there is structural damage from severe weather events like storms that could compromise safety.
