Getting started

Finding the time to do it

^ Even finding motivation to do it

Understanding the difference between a lit review and argument summation

How is research for a literature review different than for an argument paper?

Trying to review a certain subject rather than change opinions.

A literature review is supposed to be a holistic look at the pre-existing argumentation and research on a topic, whereas research for an argumentation portion is directed at building off of the lit review with new thoughts and research

A literature review is gonna have you look more at sources around the discussion whereas an argument paper will be more about the topic and less about the ethos of the sources

Lit Reviews focus on the scholarly research surrounding a topic at the current time in order to build a robust overview of all available literature

Lit review explains the current research/arguments on a topic/question; research for an argument paper supports a specific argument you are making
