elimination campaigns

An undeclared Network interwoven into all areas of society will be able to coordinate accusations against individuals (for what ever reason – could be to remove a perceived threat or perhaps as revenge for some Network member feeling violated in some way). Over a longer period any prominent (or non prominent) person will have been in contact with quite a few network members, and if the person at some point in time gets "unpopular" with the Network these can be called to launch false or exaggerated claims about the targeted person.

If these accusations are accumulated and published through mass media (where the Network will have plenty of members too) it will be possible to destroy any public figure's reputation without having the claims scrutinised by police/defence/court. The amount of claims and the way they will seem to point to the same character flaw will create an impression of a truth being exposed.

.

Claims should be sufficiently bad/ugly to paint the person as unacceptable while at the same time not that horrible that it will seem too strange no one has gone to the police.

link to blog-post:

.processing: Sketchy Steps with the Teamwork / Tag Team / Agent First Cartoon Series.