

Unit One Study Guide

Why self-government developed in the American colonies before the French and Indian War

- Which political feature of the United States developed during the colonial period?
- Why Colonial-era New England Town meetings and the Virginia House of Burgesses were important
- Factors in the Economic Development of Colonial New England
- Where the first communities in New England developed
- What was the main cause of the French and Indian War (1754–1763)?
- What did the development of farming culture among pre-Columbian Native Americans help to ensure?
- How were The Magna Carta and the English Bill of Rights significant influences on the development of constitutional government in America?
- How did Mercantilism work?
- Why did Great Britain establish the Proclamation of 1763?
- Why did Many colonies objected to the Albany Plan of Union (1754)?
- Where were most early colonies located?
- Which geographic feature was used to establish the proclamation line of 1763?
- What did the British policy of salutary neglect toward the American colonies contribute to?
- What was important about the Mayflower Compact and Fundamental Orders of Connecticut?
- Which items were involved in Triangular Trade?
- Why were indentured servants were important to the development of the colonies?
- What were the results of European exploration of the Americas?
- How were French, Spanish, and British colonies similar?
- What would be a primary source of information about the colonial era?
- How did indentured servitude work?
- What was the first important cash crop in the American colonies was
- What did the “Join or Die” cartoon represent? s for the French and Indian War
- How did the British government carried out the policy of mercantilism