

Hi Maria,

I just wanted to say how incredibly inspired I am by your story of transformation. Losing over 57 pounds, taking back control of your life, and building fulfilling relationships is a testament to your resilience, determination, and strength.

I noticed your clever use of a Jenna Wolfe quote on your Facebook post about change. It really hit home for me because it's so true. As someone who specializes in human motivation, I had to check out your program to learn more.

When I arrived at your opt-in page, I noticed you offer "17 Pieces of Advice Every Woman Over 50 Needs to Hear," which is good. However, what if it could transform their possible interest into a purchase?

While your title is good, using an empowering title like "Unlock Your Best Self Today: 17 Empowering Tips for Women Over 50 to Live Life to the Fullest!" creates a sense of urgency for your potential customers. If they're already on your page, capturing their attention with an optimized headline can help convert their interest into a sale.

Here's a cool idea for you called a 'catch and disrupt' post that uses bold visuals and unexpected statements to grab readers attention and get them to your land on your website.

I attached it below so if you like it go ahead and test it out.

The right words can be incredibly powerful so if you're interested in posts like this, reply 'Yes' and we can get started!

Hi, Maria

It reminded me of a strategy I successfully implemented for a client I like to call motivation-specialization.

By taking advantage of your viewers' pains and greatest desires is like digging into the wound, twisting the knife, then ripping off the bandaid and healing them with a solution.
