Day 12

This episode pairs well with Honeybush Rooibos

Rooibos the orange cat is napping in the music room when the man who gives her treats enters the room. He begins to make the piece of furniture on which she was sleeping make noise, and while the noise itself is not unpleasant, the vibrations from the noise disturb her nap, so she jumps down and wanders down the hallway to the room with all the books.

The room with all the books is her favorite room in the school. She is fairly certain that it is the two humans' favorite room, too, because they both seem to spend a lot of time in there, looking at the books quietly, and welcoming her when she curls up on their laps. She likes the room because it has the best places to nap. The chairs are the most comfortable, but Rooibos is also not opposed to napping on the table, or climbing to the very top of the bookshelves where she can nap completely undisturbed if neither human is there to see her climb up. When she climbs the shelves in their presence, they do tend to stop her.

Today in the room with all the books, the woman who talks to herself has clearly arranged some papers and books on one of the library tables into a bed for Rooibos. Thankful to live with such considerate humans, Rooibos makes herself at home in this little nest.
