

“I didn’t plan to steal the dragon egg, but here we are.”

“She opened the letter, read two words, and started running.”

“The clock struck thirteen, and the walls began to breathe.”

“I only met my father once—at my own funeral.”

“They said the sky would never fall. It fell this morning.”

“No one noticed when the moon went missing—except my dog.”

“The door appeared on my ceiling last night.”

“Three rules: Don’t touch the mirror, don’t speak Latin, and never whistle after midnight.”

“This town has exactly one road in, and no road out.”

“My memories don’t belong to me—and neither does my name.”

“I didn’t mean to invent a new species. It just kind of happened.”

“The storm whispered my name. Not yelled—whispered.”

“Every ten years, someone disappears. Last time, it was my sister.”

“My therapist says the ghosts aren’t real, but they sure talk a lot.”

“She walked into the diner like she hadn’t been dead for seven years.”