Appearance And How Others Perceive Him

- I present myself with confidence and authenticity.
- My appearance reflects my values and professionalism.
- Others perceive me as approachable, competent, and someone who walks the walk and talks the talk.
- People want to look and be like me.
- Others want my advice, and I just tell them to join The Real World.

Day In The Life

- I wake up early, greeted by the soft glow of morning light. The first thing I do is express gratitude for a new day. As I make my two cups of coffee, I visualize my goals, setting a positive tone for the day.
- I get the physical training out of the way and tackle today's challenges with determination and an indefatigable spirit. Mentors and colleagues see me as a reliable team player who brings bulletproof implications to every project. During breaks, I engage in brief moments of mindfulness to recharge.
- After completing daily challenges, I prioritize quality time with family and friends. Shared laughter and meaningful conversations enrich my evenings. As the day winds down, I review the day's work and prepare my mind for tomorrow's challenges before a restful night's sleep.

Storytime:

- After disappearing for 6 months, I've achieved massive success compared to anyone in my town and areas around. Friends who have doubted me and didn't want to join me in war to defeat slavery and achieve greatness, because they were too scared and lazy, have again started to call and say “What’s up with you? Where are you? Why are you not coming to party with us anymore?”. “Sorry guys, I’ve been busy doing my pushups. I’ll come this weekend.” As I drove in my 1967 Mustang Fastback, heads were turning to see who was driving. I pull up to the party, and their jaws have hit the floor, I get out of the car and greet them with “What’s up brookies?”.

(DISCLAIMER: I’m not an asshole and I wouldn’t do the last part hahaha, I would let the appearance do the talking)
