

I visited the us embassy in bangkok to have an interview for my j1 visa (au pair) and my visa has been refused. The officer did not provide me with a specific reason so i would like to clarify certain points regarding the refusal decisions of my previous visa application.

I have many professional experiences with children, which i explained in detail in ds160. However, during the interview, i did not get a chance to show proof supporting of these experiences.

The host family who wanted to invite me as their au pair provided a supporting letter, were impressed with my qualifications and wanted me to assist them in caring for their children.

The host family who wanted to invite me as their au pair provided a supporting letter, were impressed with my qualifications, and wanted me to assist them in caring for their children.

I want to join the au pair program for at least three reasons. First, I want to broaden my childcare experiences in American culture. Second, I want to improve my English language skills, and I believe that learning English with native English speakers will help me greatly. Finally, I want to use the knowledge and experience I gain from this program to help poor children in Thailand. I intend to return to Thammasat University to pursue a master's degree in social work.

This opportunity will have a significant impact on my future; I hope you will give me the opportunity to clarify and reconsider my visa application.
